Mr. MADDEN. Yes; sometimes. However, most of this is paid because the schedules show an amount in excess of what you really owe. We have paid back from July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1927, $793,000,000. The total internal-revenue collections in that period was $35,000,000,000. Three billion six hundred million dollars of that was collected on underpaid schedules, so that while we have been paying money back on overpaid schedules to the amount of over $800,000,000 we have been collecting on underpaid schedules $3,600,000,000. This would be about $4.50 collected on underpaid schedules for every dollar we have returned on overpaid schedules.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I am very glad to have that go in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. We have an item amounting to $46,000,000 for pensions due the veterans of the Civil War and all other wars. This amount was $37,200,000 in the last deficiency bill. The bill failed and we were obliged to borrow the money from the 1928 appropriation to meet the 1927 obligations. We have to add to that $37,000,000 about $9,000,000 more because of an underestimate for the fiscal year 1928.

Then we have military posts. We have a building fund created from the sale of military property no longer needed for military purposes, and all the moneys that are derived from that source go into a special fund to be used for the construction of military buildings to house the Army. We carry $6,162,000 for post construction, as authorized by the act of February 25, 1927, and $3,680,000 of this comes from that special fund.

We have also military and naval compensation. That is under the Veterans' Bureau, and the amount is $19,400,000 of direct appropriation and a reappropriation of $35,600,000, making in all $55,000,000. I may say here that $19,000,000 of this $55,000,000 is due to an act passed by Congress last year alloting $50 a month to veterans who are classed as arrested tuberculosis cases. Thirty-six thousand of these cases have already been adjusted. There are 60,000 altogether estimated, and this leaves 24,000 to be adjusted. It is estimated that this legislation which you passed, fixing $50 as the monthly compensation in arrested tuberculosis cases, will cost the Government $15,000 per man, based on their expectancy of life, and that altogether for the period of the lives of these men it will cost the Government $900,000,000.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. That basis is upon a consideration of natural health, I suppose, and with these ex-service men having tuberculosis——

Mr. MADDEN. These are arrested tuberculosis cases. The tuberculosis has been stopped in all of these cases.

Mr. ALLGOOD. But naturally their expectancy of life would not be so great.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I am not an actuary and can not answer the gentleman's question definitely. I am giving the gentleman such information as came to us from the Veterans' Bureau.

You will remember that we have an act approved May 26, 1926, authorizing the expenditure of $165,000,000 for public buildings. The sum of $15,000,000 of that $165,000,000 was intended to be added to the limit of cost of buildings which were authorized in 1913, but which it was impossible to build on account of increased prices due to the war. The amount of $50,000,000 was allotted to be used in the District of Columbia for the erection of additional public buildings, and $100,000,000 was to be used throughout the country, outside of the District of Columbia. The limitations placed by the law on the annual expenditure was in the aggregate $25,000,000.

This bill carries $8,131,000. The bill which failed last session carried nearly $20,000,000 for public buildings. The difference between $8,131,000 and the $20,000,000 has been transferred to the annual Treasury bill in which all public buildings are usually provided for. The reason for this is that $25,000,000 is all that the Government can spend in any one year under the law. With what they have already expended in 1928—and this is for the 1928 fiscal year—and that which they have on hand unexpended, plus this $8,131,000, and what they can use from the next bill, would bring them up to the total of the amount they are authorized to expend. So a number of buildings provided for in the bill that failed have been transferred to the annual bill; but none of these buildings has been set aside except for some very unusual special reason. Practically all of them are provided for in the Treasury bill, and that bill will become a law in the next few months and no rights will be lost.

However, I think it is fair to say, for the information of the House, that on account of the failure of the bill last spring the progress of the public building program has been retarded at least a year, because you can not expend under the law the money within the year on account of the passage of time that could have been expended if we had been able to go on and spend the money that was provided for between that time and the 1st of next July. Therefore we are a year behind.

There will be many buildings delayed more or less on account of the failure of the other bill, and it may be that in the total round-up of the provisions that can be made out of the proposed $100,000,000 to be expended under the act we will not be able to reach all the buildings.

We proposed $100,000,000 more early last spring before we adjourned, as you will recall, and the measure passed the House but did not pass the Senate. I think this bill for an additional $100,000,000 ought to be passed early in this session, and we should increase the limit of annual expenditures for buildings and make it $35,000,000 instead of $25,000,000 a year and give to each State greater elasticity in the creation of the obligations that follow the letting of contracts for public buildings and thereby give to the various sections of the country the advantage of the new facilities that could be afforded out of the additional $100,000,000; and I hope that before long such a bill will be introduced, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and passed by the House, sent to the Senate, passed by the Senate, and signed by the President. [Applause.]

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. I would like to ask the chairman if any immediate benefit would accrue to the country by authorizing an additional $100,000,000 when the $100,000,000 that has been authorized can not be expended during three years to come, even under a $35,000,000 limit?

Mr. MADDEN. We could fix the limit so there would be an advantage by putting more into it every year, and we could make it more elastic by allowing more to be expended in any one year than is being expended now.

Mr. BUSBY. But as the law stands this additional $100,000,000 that the gentleman speaks of——

Mr. MADDEN. We could modify that, too.

Mr. BUSBY. You could not reach that even with a $35,000,000 limit before three years from now.

Mr. MADDEN. No; but we could modify that act.

Mr. BUSBY. Does not the gentleman think we ought to increase the amount available to more than $35,000,000 a year if we authorize another $100,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. I just suggested that as a mere form of speech. You can do anything you want to do and fix any limit you like; it will be very agreeable to me. I am just suggesting an idea, and I am not tying anybody up to the figures I have indicated.

Then we have an item here of $7,000,000 for flood control. This is an important item. It is an item that was expended without anybody having any authority as to some of it to authorize its expenditure. I am as culpable, perhaps, as anybody, and probably more so. I am willing to go to jail for having violated the law in a good cause, if that is necessary. But this is the situation, and I think every Member of the House ought to know about it.

The Mississippi floods were terrible. The loss of property and of life was appalling. Nobody can dream of the terrible situation that existed there unless he saw it.

The Mississippi River Commission had on hand about $3,100,000 when the floods receded low enough so they could begin to do some work to protect for the future. They had the right to spend this $3,100,000 as they thought proper. The expenditure of this money was strictly within the law. They had already expended about $1,900,000 of their funds before this question which I am about to describe to you was raised, and many people were telling about the need of $20,000,000 more to fill up the gaps that were washed out of the levees by the floods. One hundred and seventeen, I think, was the total number of crevasses.

Some of these needed as much as 2,000,000 yards of filling. There was a danger of a flood from fall rains, and the danger that would follow from the new floods with these crevasses that were open and no money to meet the emergency. It was suggested that we use the money that was on hand for the Mississippi River Commission. Then the further suggestion that we authorize the Secretary of War to use $2,000,000 from the river and harbor fund. It was clear that the Secretary of War had no authority to use money for this purpose. The matter was submitted to the Comptroller General, who rendered an opinion that nobody had authority to authorize the expenditure. That decision was clearly within the law.

I was away, the President was anxious, and the Secretary of War was willing to act, and everybody along the Mississippi River trembled with fear of another flood. It was some time before they could reach me. I had no more authority than anybody else, but I happened to be chairman of the Appropriations Committee. It was like it was in the war when we ordered ships to be built to carry troops and supplies. We authorized the President to use the Shipping Board to build the ships. The only reason we used it was that that was the nearest thing that sounded like ships, and, although they knew nothing about it, they built them.

So they came to me because I was chairman of the Appropriations Committee. They asked me to authorize the expenditure of $2,000,000 outside of the law and take a chance of getting Congress to ratify my action. I wrote to the Comptroller General, got a copy of his decision, and I agreed with every word of it. I wrote and told him that if I had been in his place I would have rendered the same decision that he did, but perhaps not with as much ability. There are times in one's life when it is more important to meet a great emergency than it is to obey the law. I was in a position where I would prefer to meet the emergency than to obey the law.

Congress was not in session, and I could not appeal to Congress for the money. So I said to the Secretary of War—and the President and the Director of the Budget agreed—that the Secretary of War was the party to carry out the mandate, if you call it that. He was ready to go to jail with me if we had to go to jail for doing it. So we authorized the expenditure of $2,000,000, with the hope that when the work was done the Congress would see the justice of the expenditure. Here we are. We come to you to pay back the $5,000,000 that was spent by the Mississippi River Commission out of funds it had and the $2,000,000 allotted by the Secretary of War out of the river and harbor fund. The $7,000,000 was used to fill up these crevasses.

The crevasses were filled up and the property of the people down there was protected. The expenditure was made for a legitimate purpose and we ask you to ratify it by appropriating the $7,000,000 that I have described and validate the action that was taken.

Then we have $9,300,000 in this bill to cover the increased limit of cost on the airplane carriers Saratoga and Lexington. That will bring the total cost of the two carriers up to $77,000,000. They are the two biggest craft of their kind in the world, and the fastest and most expensive.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will this be the last increase?

Mr. MADDEN. One is already in the service and the other will be as soon as we can get her out in the stream from behind the bridge where she now lies.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There have been three or four increases.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; they were built on cost plus, and they have been coming up from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000. They have the speed and size, and they will give the service. The life of these ships is not very long, and still we have to have them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They have too much size; it would be better if they were smaller.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, we have got them, and we are meeting the obligations placed upon us.

Now, in reference to the submarines. It used to be, not long since, when you could build a battleship at a cost of $5,000,000. Now submarines cost $7,000,000. A cruiser would cost about $4,000,000, and now they cost $20,000,000. And yet we are going to build a lot more cruisers, and we will have to have them to meet the obligations placed upon us by—what shall I say—the atmosphere existing between the different peoples of the world or between the leaders of the world.

Then we have the Cape Cod Canal that has been with us a long time. The legislation enacted in connection with this canal has placed upon us an obligation of $5,500,000.

When the act was passed they wanted $7,000,000, of which $1,500,000 was for interest. We refused to allow them to collect the interest, and we are carrying this item here without interest, at the principal figure of the cost agreed to under the contract.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the balance of the $11,000,000, is it not?

Mr. MADDEN. There are $6,000,000 of bonds existing on the property, and $5,500,000 is for other property of various kinds. When we pay the $11,500,000 the Cape Cod Canal will probably serve a very useful purpose, after we have spent about $25,000,000 more on it.

Mr. BLANTON. And after they get this sum the gentleman assures that they will not get this interest?

Mr. MADDEN. They will not as long as I have anything to say about it.

Mr. BLANTON. As long as the gentleman is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee on this. We have a great many items in the bill. Some of them are controversial. One of them perhaps I ought to explain at this time. The Secretary of the Navy came and wanted $4,500,000 with which to buy oil to fill the tanks that were built by the Doheny people and others in Hawaii and at Portsmouth. It is a good thing to fill the tanks, because they belong to the United States and the Supreme Court has decided definitely that these tanks do belong to the United States beyond the right of those people to sue for them. Of course, they can come to Congress, and I understand that they will, but as far as I am concerned I am opposed to the payment of one cent to anybody on that account. [Applause.] However, they wanted the right to fill the tanks, but they wanted the right to take the money out of the receipts from royalty oil and put it into this fund instead of into the Treasury, and then pay for the oil out of that. I am opposed to that. If they want $4,500,000 with which to buy oil to put into the tanks, I am for that by direct appropriation, but I am not in favor of letting anybody use any money that does not come into the Treasury first, to be appropriated by the Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. So we have eliminated the provision for this $4,500,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it not true that the original contract was made by the Navy to avoid the necessity of coming to Congress and asking for this appropriation?

Mr. MADDEN. I am afraid that it was.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And now that we have caught them with the goods on, they want Congress to forgive them.

Mr. MADDEN. I am afraid it was, but I am not willing that they should repeat it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I commend the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. We have another item recommended by the Budget, not all here, of $13,150,000, half of which we have for this bill. It was intended to be used for improvements on the battleships Oklahoma and Nevada, putting the blisters on and otherwise improving them. It had included within it, without saying so specifically, the sum of $940,000 for the elevation of guns on 2 ships. There are 13 of these ships on which the guns were to be elevated. Nothing was specifically said about the elevation of the guns in the proposal that came to the committee, and I was not willing, nor was any other member of the committee willing, to come to the House with the proposal and ask you to appropriate what would result in the expenditure of $6,500,000, including this item here, without knowing what you were voting on, and so to make this question one that would raise the issue and give you knowledge of what it is we are proposing, the committee, at my suggestion, struck out the $940,000 for the elevation of the guns and wrote a proviso into the bill following the rest of the appropriation to the effect that no part of that money should be used for the elevation of the guns on these two ships. And this morning we had a friend who hurt his throat telling you how iniquitous the committee is and how it assumed arbitrary authority to deny the right of the House to express its opinion. Of course, no reply will be made to that.

What we want you to know is that the committee considers itself the servant of the House, and we consider that we owe certain obligations to the House, and that one of the greatest obligations we owe to the House is to let the House know what it is we are asking you to do. Therefore, we wrote this proviso into the bill so that you could not avoid knowing that you were being asked to vote $940,000 to elevate the guns on these two ships. But they say, or our friend said, "Why do they take superior power, why do they presume to have the right to think—did not we think for them? Did not the Naval Committee bring a bill in here last year and tell them what to do, and why do not they do it?" Well, they did not tell us what to do, and you voted on the bill, but there is nothing in the bill that says that you are going to be asked to appropriate the money to elevate these guns—not a thing. They avoided that, and the answer to that charge is that it was stated in the report. But, gentlemen, the report is not a part of the law. They have not bound and gagged us and stopped us from thinking and informing you of what we have been thinking. We have noted that there is no specific law on the subject of elevating the guns. There was nothing in the proposal that came to us to indicate that any of this money was to be spent specifically for elevating the guns. As loyal servants of the House we believe that we must come to you and tell you in this important case what it is we are seeking to do.

If they vote to do a thing we ask them not to do they will have done that with notice, and that will be our action as well as theirs. But if we come and do not tell you, you would have just cause for complaint. You would have the right to denounce us then because we had failed in the performance of our duty and say we were not only neglectful but that we have not the faculty to think, and that would be a proper charge then. Now we come to you and say that we have studied this problem of gun elevation. We have been informed from sources that have no information and those sources have been in the vicinity of the Navy, if they are not directly connected with it. We find the Japanese guns have been elevated—they said the English guns have been elevated, but they have not been able to prove that. They said the Japanese had. I said, "All right, are you sure; if not sure do not deceive us. Give us information upon which we can act intelligently and let us not be in a position where we have got to deceive the House on account of our ignorance. We want to know, and we will not deceive them, because our policy is to work in harmony with the House and give them all the information we possess." Well, they sent up two pictures of the gun elevation of the Japanese Navy. The guns are standing up rather erect in those pictures, but when we asked the direct question if these guns were elevated before the treaty on the limitation of armaments or after, they could not tell. They said the picture indicated they had. Now you know when the question of the elevation of guns was up once before, we appropriated $6,500,000 for elevation. We entered into a treaty. I did not know the legal limitations placed upon our right to do those things, I am not a lawyer, but I have investigated a great many phases of the case, and I have no object in the world except to bring the truth to you. I have no object in the world now except to bring the facts and let you act upon the facts as you see proper.

We appropriated $6,500,000, and I said then when the matter was before the Committee on Appropriations if there is any doubt about our right to do this under the treaty I was opposed to it. I was told there was no doubt about our right to do it, but I did not want to take the responsibility. I know our Navy and our guns ought to be as efficient as any Navy or guns anywhere; that is the way I want them. I did not want to take the responsibility of doing a thing as a Representative that I would not do as an individual citizen of the United States. I am not going to do that now. You can criticize all you want to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it not true that we have naval attachés in Japan and Great Britain and everywhere else?

Mr. MADDEN. It is.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Can not the Navy Department, through its attachés or the State Department, find out something about these foreign navies? They know all about ours. Can not they find out whether the guns have been elevated and whether they were elevated since the treaty or before the treaty?

Mr. MADDEN. I will just answer that question in this way. When we appropriated the last $6,500,000 I had some doubt about it, and we wrote a provision in the act submitted to you that this money could not be used if it violated the treaty. We did not know whether it did or not. Then it turned out there was some doubt about whether it violated the treaty or not, that they did not tell the truth about it, and our fellows—I am going to tell this story, which I think ought to be told.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Tell it.

Mr. MADDEN. I demanded the facts, and I got this statement: There were two naval officers, one an American naval officer and the other an Englishman, and they were in a convivial condition, I understand. They were sitting around eating rich food, drinking mineral water over in England, and each one told a story and talked of this, that, and the other, and finally the Englishman said that his navy was the best, that she had the longest range, that they had elevated their guns on certain ships. Our man told this to somebody else, and somebody else said they had been told the story by some one who saw the guns while they were being elevated, and the next man who told it said he was told by somebody who saw them after they were elevated, and the next man telling the story said he was told by somebody who saw them when they shot the range. I understand they have never been elevated—not since the treaty—they may have been elevated before, but I do not know. Now, I am not asking you to do anything except to believe me when I say we are bringing you the facts as we find them, and you must do as you like with them. [Applause].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol power plant: For maintenance, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $178.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call your attention to the fact that I have just placed in the bill hopper a bill to regulate lobbyists and to disclose their interest in legislation before the Congress; I ask each and every Member of Congress to consider the provisions of this bill.

An editorial recently appearing in the Wisconsin News, one of the Hearst newspapers published in Milwaukee, Wis., contains such a forceful argument in favor of this legislation that I shall read it into the RECORD. I believe this editorial has appeared in every Hearst paper throughout the country, because I find it in the Washington Times for November 21, 1927, as well as many other of the Hearst newspapers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman say he believes in the principles advocated in all the Hearst papers?

Mr. SCHAFER. Not all of them. However, I believe in many of them, including those indicated in the editorial which I am about to read.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to be sure about that.

Mr. SCHAFER. I agree with a great many of their editorial policies, such, for example, as to the modification of the Volstead Act. [Laughter.] I read:

FORCE LOBBYISTS INTO THE OPEN—CONGRESS SHOULD FOLLOW WISCONSIN'S EXAMPLE

Congress, soon to assemble, must do one job of house cleaning before the session closes. It is that of putting into the open lobbyists of all brands receiving compensation for their services, that Congress and the country may know their connections, if not their methods.

One writer has described the swarms of lobbyists as the "third house of Congress." They are brazenly, perniciously active at all times. The majority of Members of Congress do not know the truth as to their activities and their connections. The public knows nothing unless the President or some statesman forces an investigation of lobbying processes, which seldom happens.

HIRAM JOHNSON comes out with charges that the Electric Power Trust is again prepared to spend immense sums of money to defeat the Boulder Dam project or any other legislation in Congress that does not suit the mighty combination of electric power and electric interests in this country.

Aside from the matter of Boulder Dam, lobbyists do swarm in the Halls of Congress, visit committee rooms, entertain persons of influence, and get away with things the American people would not tolerate if they knew the facts.

These lobbyists can be brought into the open. They can be controlled. They can be prevented from underground work that is a disgrace to the country.

That they have the right to present their affairs to Congress is not questioned. Every American citizen on legitimate business has the right to petition Congress, to present his views there, or to any other governmental agency. No law will attempt to prevent that.

The paid lobbyists may be reached by a law requiring their registration at the Capitol. Massachusetts and Wisconsin have such laws and they are reasonably effective.

Upon dockets are entered the names of all persons employed as legislative counsel or agents. These entries must include the names of employers; the names, residences, and occupations of the employees; the dates of employment, agreements, etc., and even the subjects of legislation engaged upon, with the titles and numbers of bills.

Lobbyists are denied admission to the floors of the legislative chambers, to cloakrooms, reading rooms, or reception rooms.

The Wisconsin law requires that legislative agents or counsel whose names appear on the legislative dockets must file, within 30 days after the close of a session, complete and detailed statements of expenses under oath.

There are suitable penalties for violating the provisions of these laws, as there should be.

The leadership of conservative Massachusetts and progressive Wisconsin could safely be followed by Congress. It should be followed by that body.

The country is entitled to know what interests are attempting to influence important legislation in Congress. It is entitled to light, not darkness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. May I have another minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. My bill is patterned after the laws of Wisconsin. If enacted into law, it will bring to the light of day the interests represented by lobbyists and their employers, and will also prevent former Members of this House and of the Senate during the time in which they are employed as paid legislative agents or lobbyists from coming upon this floor or the floor of the Senate. It is highly improper for a former Member of Congress to have the privilege of the floor of this House and the cloak rooms and mingle with the Members during a period in which he may be the highest paid lobbyist in the country, perhaps employed by such an insidious organization as that which is now making such extraordinary efforts to procure the repeal of the Federal inheritance tax. I feel that the majority of the membership of this House, after reading my bill, will reach the conclusion that it is fair and just and that its enactment is highly desirable by the Congress and a great majority of the people of America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATER DEPARTMENT—OUT OF THE WATER REVENUES

For purchase of a site for a new third high service reservoir, $34,000, in addition to $50,000 for this purpose contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1927: Provided, That the amounts herein specified shall be available until June 30, 1928, for the acquisition of such site in accordance with a final award in condemnation proceedings.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: On page 22, after line 24, insert the following: "The rates of assessment in effect on June 30, 1927, for laying or constructing water mains or service sewers in the District of Columbia, under the provisions of the act of April 22, 1904, shall continue in effect during the remainder of the fiscal year 1928 and thereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, $1,880,000, to remain available until expended, being part of $7,500,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1928 by the act approved June 22, 1926, and authorized to be apportioned and prorated among the States and obligated by contracts and otherwise by the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we shall return, before the completion of the reading of this bill, to this point in the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the nature of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. COLLINS. It is an amendment which is identical with the item carried in the bill of last year.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection to returning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to return to this point in the bill, before the completion of the reading of the bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount to enable the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to complete the work of the domestic-wool section of the War Industries Board and to enforce Government regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918, including the same objects specified under this head in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, $2,500.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLGOOD: On page 26, line 22, add: "Provided, That hereafter all statements for publication shall be submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval before they shall be given out for publication by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that, but will withhold it if the gentleman from Alabama desires to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I see where the Bureau of Agricultural Economics is asking for $25.53 to be placed to the credit of the Curtis-Martin Newspapers (Inc.) for advertising. This bureau did some very unfavorable advertising, so far as the Southern States are concerned, this year by reason of a statement issued, which, in my opinion, was uncalled for and was without the bounds of the law as prescribed. The law provides:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and publish statistics of the grade and staple length of cotton," approved March 3, 1927.

And the law provides for certain statements to be issued by the Department of Agriculture. But it seems to me that the Bureau of Agricultural Economics went beyond its authority under the law in making an extraneous statement which unfavorably affected the sale of our cotton right at the time it was being marketed. This Bureau of Economics made a statement that "compared with former years of production and consumption, they expected to see cotton sell at a considerably cheaper price"; and as the result our cotton market broke $10 a bale immediately upon the issuance of this statement. We have never been able to overcome that lick or stroke from behind. The psychology of it was bad. It is like saying something evil about the character of a man or a woman; it is hard to overcome. We have not been able to overcome this stroke that was made by this Bureau of Agricultural Economics. This statement was of such a character that the people of the Nation know that it should not have been made.

It has cost us millions of dollars. It caused our people to sell their cotton at a low price because thousands of them could not hold it. Poor men, the men who really needed the best price for their cotton, were forced to sell at that time because they had debts that were due and had to be paid.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLGOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was that a forecast of the crop?

Mr. ALLGOOD. No; it was a statement that was not authorized by law. It was an extraneous statement, and one absolutely unauthorized under the law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was the statement erroneous?

Mr. ALLGOOD. Yes; it was erroneous.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They issue regular bulletins as to the amount of the crop?

Mr. ALLGOOD. Yes; according to law. But we have not been able to understand why the Department of Agriculture, the department that is supposed to be the friend of the farmer and to safeguard the interests of the farmer—we of the South were not able to understand why the Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture would issue a statement like this. It caused such a furor over the country that the President called a Cabinet meeting and there were orders given that no such statement should be made hereafter. But this present administration is going out and we do not know who will hold the reins of Government hereafter, and we would like to be safeguarded and protected.

Therefore I have seized this occasion on the first day of this session of Congress that this House has done any legislative business to bring this matter to the attention of the Members of the House and have seized this opportunity to offer this amendment which will prevent by law the issuance of similar statements in the future. I hope the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will see fit to withdraw his point of order against the amendment and give this House the opportunity to adopt the amendment, but if he feels that he can not do so, I want to say now that I will appeal to the Committee on Agriculture to bring in a bill that will do what my amendment would do, and I shall leave nothing undone to get this bill enacted into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is a change of law.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no doubt in the opinion of the Chair as to the fact that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians (tribal funds): To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make payment of fees to the attorneys of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, under a tribal contract approved October 12, 1923, fiscal year 1928, $85,000, payable out of the fund held in trust for said tribes under the provisions of Public Resolution 36, approved June 12, 1926.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of my colleague [Mr. McKEOWN] to return to this point in the bill to-morrow in order to offer an amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I told the gentleman from Oklahoma that we would not foreclose his right to offer his amendment to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to this point in the bill to-morrow for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. McKEOWN].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EDUCATION

Education of natives of Alaska: Not exceeding $3,064.84 of the unexpended balance of this appropriation for the fiscal year 1926 shall be available for the payment of obligations, as follows: Traveling expenses, $625, and freight, including operation of U. S. S. Boxer, $2,439.84, in addition to the amounts appropriated for those objects under this head for said fiscal year.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Ways and Means Committee to make a favorable report on H. R. 1, to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that I have until midnight to-night to file that report. I understand the request is entirely agreeable to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file its report on the tax bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but I want to ask the gentleman a question. I note that the gentleman's committee has incorporated a provision in the bill increasing the salaries of the legislative counsel to $10,000 each.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee over that matter?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee's jurisdiction is entire. We created that office and fixed the salary originally.

Mr. BLANTON. What I mean is this: Has the committee jurisdiction to create the office and fix the salary? Because the committee did wrong once and got away with it is no reason why it should keep on doing wrong.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee did not do wrong and is not doing wrong now.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not talking about the merits of the proposition, but the assumption of authority and jurisdiction by this great Committee on Ways and Means, which it probably does not have.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think the gentleman is correct about that. We would not put it in the bill if we did not have the authority.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is necessary or not, but I want to reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think the gentleman will object when I explain the provisions of the bill. This particular provision applies only as long as the office is filled by the present incumbent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

RESOLUTIONS OF NORTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two resolutions of the legislative assembly of my State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing two resolutions adopted by the legislature of his State. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following concurrent resolutions adopted by the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota. These were received by me after the adjournment of the last session of Congress.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Robert Byrne, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was adopted by the twentieth legislative assembly on the 28th day of February, 1927.

Dated at Bismarck, N. Dak., this, the 28th day of February, 1927.

[SEAL.] ROBERT BYRNE,
Secretary of State.

Concurrent resolution (introduced by Mr. R. O. Signalness and Mr. Walter Tester) memorializing the Congress of the United States to establish the Roosevelt National Park in Billings County, N. Dak., and to provide for the substitution of public lands of the United States for the State school lands located within the proposed park area

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring):

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill to establish the Roosevelt National Park in Billings County, N. Dak., introduced by Congressman SINCLAIR, of North Dakota, December 7, 1925, being H. R. 3942; and

Whereas the tract of land in such proposed park consists of the petrified forest and the famous "Bad Lands" lying on both sides of the Little Missouri River in Billings County, N. Dak., where Theodore Roosevelt operated his historic cattle ranches and hunted wild game in the early history of Dakota Territory, and which tract is admirably fitted by nature for scenic purposes and preserves in its natural state the mountainous character and the wild, unchanged condition which existed in the West 50 years ago, and which tract it is practicable and appropriate to preserve as a national park in the honor of Theodore Roosevelt, in the interest of American scenic beauty, and as a relic of the traditional pioneer conditions of the West, which have all but disappeared from the North American Continent; and

Whereas there is included in said proposed park area approximately 42,000 acres of public lands belonging to the State of North Dakota known as State school lands, which was granted to it by the United States under sections 10 and 11 of the enabling act of February 22, 1889, to be held in trust by the State of North Dakota for the common schools, which lands, on account of its rough and barren character, can not be sold for the minimum price of $10 per acre, as prescribed in section 11 of said enabling act, and from which the State of North Dakota gets only a nominal income; and, it further appearing that it would be expedient to exchange the said State school lands located within such proposed park area for public lands of the United States of like quantity, character, and value located in the vicinity of such proposed park: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That this twentieth legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota hereby indorses said Roosevelt National Park project and respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to establish a national park as provided for in said H. R. 3942; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress, in furtherance of said park project, make appropriate provisions for exchanging with the State of North Dakota public lands of the United States, of equal quantity, character, and value, for the State school lands lying within said proposed park area heretofore granted to the State of North Dakota under the provisions of sections 10 and 11 of the enabling act of February 22, 1889; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen for the State of North Dakota.

JNO. W. CARR,
Speaker of the House.
C. R. VERRY,
Chief Clerk of the House.
WALTER MADDOCK,
President of the Senate.
W. D. AUSTIN,
Secretary of the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Robert Byrne, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was adopted by the twentieth legislative assembly on the 28th day of February, 1927.

Dated at Bismarck, N. Dak., this the 28th day of February, 1927.

[SEAL.] ROBERT BYRNE,
Secretary of State.

Concurrent resolution introduced by Senator Martin

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives: Whereas during a period of the World War the United States Government established and fixed an arbitrary price upon the value of wheat cereal; and

Further, the Government organized and maintained a corporation which purchased and took over, handled, and resold all of the wheat grown in the United States, and prescribed certain rules and regulations concerning the sale, distribution, and consumption of the same; and

Further, that during the years 1919 and 1920 the United States Government made urgent requests of the farmers and wheat growers of the United States to put forth an effort to increase and swell the volume of wheat for consumption in the United States and for export, in order that a famine situation might be averted; and

Further, that contrary to the implied promise of the United States Government that it would continue to support the market for wheat and would maintain the price of wheat in 1919 and 1920 upon relative price level with that which was guaranteed and maintained during the period of the actual continuance of the operations of the World War; and

Further, that the Federal Government neglected to redeem its implied promise to so do; and

Further, the market price for wheat for the said years dropped considerably below the minimum price guaranteed by the Federal Government through the Federal Grain Corporation, and that by reason thereof the wheat farmers of the United States sustained tremendous losses on account of the said reduction and price;

Further, that the cost of the production of the 1919 and 1920 wheat crop was vastly enhanced by reason of the scarcity of labor and the consequent high prices paid therefor, and the high prices prevailing for all implements, machinery, and supplies necessarily used by the wheat farmers of the United States in the production of said 1919 and 1920 crops; and

Whereas the said United States or Federal Grain Corporation closed out and ceased its operations with a large surplus in the Treasury, which said surplus represented profits realized by the said Federal Grain Corporation during the period of the war, when it operated and enjoyed a complete monopoly of the wheat markets of the United States, and through said power and influence it exercised a dominant power over the markets of the world, and that in justice and equity the said surplus belongs to the wheat growers of the United States of America;

Whereas the Federal Government after the close of the World War and the termination of its contract with the manufacturers of war materials and supplies, many such manufacturers were settled with and paid large sums as a remuneration for losses sustained on account of the contract relation existing between the Federal Government and the said manufacturers;

Whereas, further, the Federal Government settled with paid claims of the railroads and transportation companies with which it had contracts, either expressed or implied, for the transportation of war material, soldiers, sailors, etc., and that large sums were paid to said transportation companies in settlement of claims which they presented to the Federal Government, many of which claims were not covered by express contracts;

Whereas the Federal Government during the period of war by its rules and regulations assumed to dictate and control the production acreage of wheat grown in the United States during the period of actual hostilities and for the years 1919 and 1920, being the reconstruction period after the war, and in consequence thereof an implied contract arose between the wheat growers and the Federal Government, and the wheat growers relied upon the said implied contract and in justice and right should be remunerated for their losses in a sum not less than a price guaranteed by the Federal Government for wheat during the period of hostilities;

Whereas the Federal Government realized a profit at the expense of the wheat grower and that the wheat grower in good faith complied with all the rules, regulations, and requests of the Federal Government, it is the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota that in justice and equity Congress should take full cognizance of these millions of dollars now in the National Treasury so retained and belonging to the wheat growers of the United States; that this money should be made available to use in any manner required in connection with legislation which should be enacted at the earliest possible date, establishing for the grower of wheat in the United States a price for his product, based upon American standards of living and costs.

Further, that a copy of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of state of the State of North Dakota and forwarded to the President and Vice President of the United States and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Dakota.

WALTER MADDOCK,
President of the Senate.
W. D. AUSTIN,
Secretary of the Senate.
JNO. W. CARR,
Speaker of the House.
C. R. VERRY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR FESS

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech delivered by Senator FESS, of Ohio, last night in the city of Washington.

Mr. SCHAFER and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It is a speech delivered before the Republican National Committee.

Mr. SCHAFER. It is not a prohibition speech?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Senator SIMEON D. FESS:

Senator FESS. Chairman Butler, ladies and gentlemen of the National Republican Committee, your committee are the directing body in aiding the American electorate to a final decision upon the administration of the affairs of the National Government. Under our constitutional system this decision comes every four years. Since the organization of the Republican Party there have been 18 such contests, covering 66 years. In 14 of these campaigns the party you represent has been commissioned to the responsible task covering 50 of the 66 years. You are met here to make preliminary plans for the campaign of next year.

You are to be congratulated on the grounds upon which you seek a favorable verdict from the people. The past is secure. The progress of the Nation since the close of the Civil War is conceded to be the record of accomplishment by the Republican Party, only twice interrupted when Cleveland and Wilson were placed in power. During Wilson's administration the leadership in prosecuting the World War was supplied by the Republican Party, although in the minority.

PRINCIPLES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Strong, efficient party organization is essential to the proper dissemination of its principles and accomplishments. The principles of the Republican Party have been added to as conditions required, but time has not yet proven any of them unsound. Accomplishments of the Republican Party are the bright spots of our history based upon those sound principles.

At the close of the World War the American electorate, with an unprecedented vote, commissioned our party to the task of rebuilding the Nation, when the problems of peace were as acute as those of war. We are now entering upon our eighth year of that task. You are come to present our case before the American people for their approval. It is upon that record you will ask a decision. A public debt of $26,500,000,000 has been reduced to less than $18,000,000,000. An annual interest charge of a fraction over $1,000,000,000 has been reduced to $670,000,000. In this connection it should not be overlooked that the Executive, the spending agency, was under control of our opponents until March 4, 1921; Congress, the appropriating agency, was under the control of the Republicans from March 4, 1919. The record will disclose savings of hundreds of millions of dollars estimated and recommended by the Democratic President but denied by the Republican Congress. The payment of every dollar of the public debt since March 4, 1919, was made possible by the Republican Congress in power since that date. The payment of a billion dollars per year, at an annual saving of forty-five millions in interest, does not seem so stupendous until viewed in the light of the payment of the Civil War debt of but two billions in 60 years. Stupendous as has been this accomplishment it did not prevent progressive reduction of the burdens of taxation in 1922 to the amount of $835,000,000; in 1924, an additional $400,000,000; and in 1926, an additional $387,000,000, totaling a saving of something like four and a quarter million dollars per day every day in the year. We are now preparing to save an additional half or three-quarter million per day at an early date in the present session of Congress.

Valuable as are these accomplishments, they could not have been realized were it not for a governmental policy of applying the burdens in such a way as to insure business activity, upon which depended the flow of revenue to the Treasury in the form of taxes. One of the most important tasks was revision of our taxing system so as not to dry up the channels of business. There is still work ahead of us in this particular field. You have heard discussed this evening the part legislation has played in solving these problems. Let me now indicate what has been done by the administrative department of the Government.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING

The most outstanding feature of this problem is the manner in which the financial operations of the Government have been carried on. The absorption of the liquid assets of the banks to care for the hang over of over $3,000,000,000 of unfunded Government debts denied to industry at least $7,000,000,000 of credit. Its worst phase was an unemployment problem of 5,000,000 men. The immediate task was to release these funds for industry. The success is well known.

The next task was to refund or retire the Victory notes of four billion plus, due in May, 1923. The manner in which this was done is well known. Including the three-fourths billion dollars of war-savings stamps, here were maturities due amounting to nearly $8,000,000,000 adjusted by short-time refunding and retirement at a lower rate of interest without disturbing the business activity of the Nation.

The Treasury then took up the second Liberty loan of $3,407,000,000, due in 1942. By September of this year all but three-fourths of a billion dollars had been cared for at convenient maturities so as to enable the Government to take care of them when due. The September financing was at 3⅛ per cent. The Treasury is now ready to take up the third Liberty loan of $2,147,000,000, due next October. Here are financial operations approaching $14,000,000,000 readjusted at lower rates of interest and handled in such manner that neither the national structure is strained nor the industrial organization interrupted. If there is any approach to this success in the financial history of any country or at any time, I am not aware of it. It suggests what might have been done had we had less ability in the management.

SUSTAINED PROSPERITY

One, if not the greatest, achievement of this administration is sustained prosperity through stabilization of industry by which the country is saved from the calamitous results of the cycle in business where a low level follows a high level of business activity. It has ever been the course of industry to follow a period of great prosperity with one of great depression. This had come to be looked upon as an inevitable situation which could not be avoided. So general was this rule that one period was always looked upon as a warning to the country of the other. Even to-day every recession of business is a warning to the business world of the beginning of the looked-for depression. We are far in the sixth year of a high level of business, the longest sustained level of our experience, where the volume is beyond that of any period in our history. Production has gradually increased, and is generally higher in 1927 than any year of this period of phenominal enterprise. This increase extends to manufactures, mining products, and electric-power production. It is many points beyond pre-war production.

The construction program for the past five years reached a volume of six billion per year, or thirty billion. The present year may reach $7,000,000,000, a volume never before reached.

Agriculture, the first to feel the hurt and last to find relief, has gradually approached an equal price level with industry.

Transportation, a fair barometer of conditions, has reached its highest plane of service. The year 1927 furnishes the country with the greatest volume of traffic, the greatest number of weekly car loadings, the most expeditious and safe transit, the cheapest service, with least delays due to scarcity of equipment ever experienced in the history of transportation.

Labor is better employed, in more stable condition, at the highest scale of wage in history.

The price current of money is reasonable, and wholesale and retail sales are slightly lower. If this recession were due to failure of market, it would be disturbing, but since it is due to efficiency in industry, where cost is lowered without reducing wages, it is the soundest economy, as it thereby increases the purchasing power of the public, the best barometer of sound prosperity.

The American standard of living is not only the highest of all countries, but it is higher to-day in America than ever before, almost double what it was before the World War. This standard does not only display itself in the purchasing power of the average citizen, but especially in his savings, and our national income.

This period of high business level, beginning with the program of "work and save" of this administration, is not accidental, but the result of sound economic judgment applied to the Government's business and keeping the door open to enterprise, both the organization of new and the expansion of old.

Our industrial leaders have been concerned about when we shall reach the saturation point. They fear that production will produce an unsalable surplus, when industry must slow down, and by breaking down the buying power, be compelled to slow down indefinitely to the great hurt of the suffering public. The recent slowing down of steel was to them a warning. The falling off of freight likewise gave them a scare. But when the new car reaches production which will revive the auto trade, steel will again reach capacity.

When it is learned that coal, the chief element of freight, had been moved at an earlier period when car loading had reached the peak, the scare was relieved.

It has been an ambition of this administration to prevent an undisposable surplus in industry, by adopting the "from hand to mouth" policy of production to hold it within the limits of consumption. When production is for storage rather than consumption, danger is ahead. Whether overproduction or underconsumption, the situation invariably breaks the power of consumption, and wide suffering prevails. This administration avoids this situation by urging slowing down of production when it outruns contracts for future delivery. In this way industry is stabilized and the cycle in business is avoided. Only genius and efficiency could accomplish these results.

INTEREST IN AGRICULTURE

If this principle could be applied to agriculture, it would solve the problem. It is obvious that agriculture does not admit of regulation of production as easily as industry, but it can be very materially aided through its marketing agencies assisted by the Government. It is at least a field for sincere investigation. The administration has not been tardy in legislation for the agriculturist. Its program of rehabilitation was the most ambitious. It enacted an emergency tariff act limited to agricultural products. No such favor was ever given to any other industry at any time. Its program as enacted into law upon the recommendation of two agricultural commissions included:

(1) The agricultural credits act.

(2) Giving agriculture representation upon the Federal Reserve Board.

(3) War Finance Corporation.

(4) Cooperative marketing act.

(5) Packers and stockyards act.

(6) Grain gambling act.

(7) Warehouse act.

(8) Butter standard act.

(9) Naval stores act.

(10) Filled milk act, and many other acts, besides an enlargement of the department to aid the farmer in his marketing.

LABOR'S HIGH STANDARD

One of the very best barometers is the situation of labor, and, judged by that standard, our country is in a most fortunate position.

Labor is generally employed, and at a scale of wage higher in some branches than at the peak of the war. A high scale of wage has been accepted as a sound economic principle. Profit in business is no longer a big margin over cost by breaking down labor, but rather a small margin and big sales, which is possible because of buying power created by a reasonably high scale of wage.

Labor has never been more efficient than to-day. The old rule of sustaining price by limiting hours and output of work has given way to giving increased production for increased pay. Never in history have deposits in our savings banks reached such amounts as to-day. Out of our 115,000,000 people, men, women, and children, there are about 40,000,000 who have savings accounts of one form or other.

The trend toward labor in the ownership of securities in the industries in which they are employed is one of the most profound of our present day. The numbers will reach seven figures. In the steam transportation lines alone, probably 600,000 laborers own stock in the companies. Another even more profound tendency of labor is home ownership. The movement in real estate in every city of the land in building homes, not for rent but for ownership, sold on a basis of payment where it is possible for the laborer to own his own home, is profound. There are three and a half times more home owners among American labor than all the home owners, big and little, rich and poor, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain. Labor has become so financially strong that at least 15 banks are owned and operated by union labor in the United States to-day, to say nothing of nearly 100 financial corporations of one sort or another. Never has there been a better feeling between labor and capital than to-day. Few periods of recent time have been so free of the lockout and strike. This is due in part to the administration's effort to set up machinery for adjustment of disputes. The recent railroad adjustment legislation is an example where numerous disputes have been amicably settled without disturbance to the public.

But in the main the real explanation is a policy to promote prosperity, that of a protective tariff by which we aim to open the way to profitable investment of American capital in the employment of American labor, at an American scale of wage, to insure an American standard of living, the highest to-day ever reached by any people in history. This American policy creates the American market for American agriculture, without which agriculture would cease to be more than to feed the producer of food, which would totally prostrate that first great industry.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS

The United States of America to-day, nine years after the close of the World War, occupies the place of influence and power never reached by any nation of history. We emerged from the war with the same aims and aspirations we had when we entered it. Our foreign policy announced by Washington and Monroe had been rigidly respected. After the World War ended a most bitter controversy took place over the determination of the then party in power to abandon our policy heretofore adhered to. Twice have the American people spoken on the proposal, and twice they overwhelmingly refused to abandon it. We refuse to bind ourselves in advance upon unknown contingencies. We do not choose isolation, but we do demand independence. We prefer cooperation to alliance. We reserve the right to make our own decisions rather than have them made for us by dictation. Our influence is more potent when acting as an independent sovereign than when pooled. We stand ready to assist, but must be the best judge as to what and when. We wish not to become a partisan in Europe's political quarrels, but are ready with our counsel and good offices, as well as our good will and bounty to succor to our limit.

There is scarcely a country which, in the hour of great disaster, has not had our aid. This administration led the world in world peace in limiting capital ships, ending naval rivalry, and attempted to induce Europe to take similar steps in the army.

We canceled the Anglo-Japanese alliance and set up machinery for settling disputes arising in the Pacific Ocean regions. We led in the open door in China and secured her political and territorial integrity.

We led in the economic recovery in Europe and gave our best assistance to furthering the peace of the Old World. Our President used his best efforts toward substantial peace in the only rational assurance against war—a reasonable limitation of arms.

We have pacified and stabilized the political and industrial situations in Haiti and Central America. We have aided Mexico in her efforts toward stabilization without sacrificing the rights of American citizens. In all of our relations we have a desire for peace and justice. We ask nothing for ourselves which we do not freely grant to others. No nation in the past has ever reached a position of power, influence, and honor superior to the United States in 1927. At no time in history have a people enjoyed greater prosperity with comforts of life so generally distributed as do our people. No people of history ever approached the buying power as do our people, with greater liberties under the law. These are some of the accomplishments which justify you in seeking approval from the people. They are what may be called Republican prosperity. Some would say Coolidge prosperity. Lighter burdens in the Government mean greater savings for the people. Money saved by rigid economy means comforts assured for the people.

This is the Coolidge philosophy underlying his governmental policies.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 47

Resolved, That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, for the use of the House document room.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KIESS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I may say that the supply in the document room is already entirely exhausted and there are thousands of demands for it.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 48

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the printing act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed 300 additional copies of the hearings before said committee on a bill to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this provides for less than one copy per Member. Why does not the gentleman bring in a proper resolution which would give us at least two copies apiece?

Mr. KIESS. There are 1,000 printed copies and this provides for 300 additional copies.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean two extra copies apiece. The revenue bill is one of the most important bills coming before the Congress and our constituents are interested in it, and the taxpayers of the country generally are interested. Certainly each Member ought to have two additional copies. I would like to have two additional copies.

Mr. KIESS. I am sure the gentleman can have them.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want more than my proportion of them, however.

Mr. KIESS. There are 1,000 copies printed by order of the committee, and this is the same number printed in former Congresses when we had a similar revenue bill. If there is a shortage, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, we will issue an order from the Joint Committee on Printing, under the $200 limit, to print some more, so I am sure this will take care of the requests.

The resolution was agreed to.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one moment in the absence of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] desired to make the announcement to the Members of the House that at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, in Statuary Hall, there will be ceremonies incident to the unveiling of the statue of Alexander H. Stephens.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE OSCAR E. KELLER

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to proceed under unanimous consent for just a moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, the Members, I am sure, will all recall the very faithful service extending from the period of the Sixty-sixth Congress through the Sixty-ninth Congress, of Oscar E. Keller, of St. Paul, Minn.

I regret very much to have to announce that something like three weeks preceding the convening of this Congress he passed away after a rather extended illness. Mr. Keller, prior to coming to Washington, had rendered useful service to his municipality in a number of very important positions. We all know of the faithful way in which he endeavored to perform his work here. In his death his friends have lost a very loyal friend and his constituency lost a courageous man with fine public spirit.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 8, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

160. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927 (H. Doc. No. 9); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

161. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statements from the offices and bureaus of the Treasury Department showing in detail what officers and employees performed travel on official business from points outside of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927; to the Committee on Appropriations.

162. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriations under the legislative establishment for the bookstacks in the Library building, fiscal year 1929, the sum of $387,000 (H. Doc. No. 88); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FLOOD CONTROL OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

There is submitted herewith a letter from the Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, transmitting with favorable recommendation the report of Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, containing the plan of the Army engineers for flood control of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley.

In my message to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the first session of the Seventieth Congress, the flood-control problem of the lower Mississippi and the urgent necessity for its solution were outlined. The general duties and responsibilities of the Federal Government in connection therewith were therein discussed.

The total cost of the recommended project is $296,400,000, distributed over a period of 10 years. This large sum is manifestly justified by the necessities of the situation and the benefits that will result. In determining the distribution of the costs, there must be considered not only the people of the valley itself, who receive the major portion of the benefits, but also the great mass of taxpayers who suffer less directly from Mississippi River floods and upon whom most of the burden of Federal taxation falls. It is axiomatic that States and other local authorities should supply all land and assume all pecuniary responsibility for damages that may result from the execution of the project. It would be revolutionary for the Federal Government to establish the precedent of buying part of the land upon which to build protective works to increase the value of the remainder. Similarly it would be very unwise for the United States in generously helping a section of the country to render itself liable for consequential damages. The Federal Treasury should bear the portion of the cost of engineering structures for flood control that is justified by the national aspects of the problem and the national benefits. It may even bear 80 per cent of such costs, but substantial local cooperation is essential to avoid waste. The portion this would leave to be borne locally for flood-control structures represents an expenditure of about $3, or 30 cents per year, for 10 years for each acre in the alluvial valley to be protected every year from Mississippi River floods. The value per acre, including railroads, towns, cities, and other improvements, is estimated at something over $200. It would seem that the States should share with the Federal Government the burden of assisting the levee districts and individual property owners, especially in view of the fact that the States benefit directly by the increased taxes from land made more valuable by reason of its protection.

The plan transmitted herewith is comprehensive and appeals to me as being adequate in its engineering. I concur in general in the conclusions and recommendations reached in the report, and suggest that appropriate legislation be enacted putting them into effect.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1927.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provisions, viz:

The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs collection districts and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor.

Pursuant to the requirements of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state the following changes in the organization of the customs service have been made by Executive order since the last report:

By Executive order dated December 8, 1926, Holeb and Jackman were consolidated into one customs port of entry to be known as Holeb-Jackman and to comprise all of the territory at present included in said ports in customs collection district No. 1 (Maine and New Hampshire), with headquarters at Portland, Me., effective December 15, 1926.

By Executive order dated January 27, 1927, the ports of Ellsworth, Bar Harbor, and South West Harbor, in customs collection district No. 1 (Maine and New Hampshire), were abolished and a new port of entry created to be known as Bar Harbor, in the said customs collection district, with headquarters at Portland, Me., and comprising Mount Desert Island, the city of Ellsworth, and the townships of Hancock, Sullivan, Sorrento, Gouldsboro, and Winter Harbor, effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated February 5, 1927, the ports of Kenosha and Kewaunee, in customs collection district No. 37 (Wisconsin), with headquarters at Milwaukee, Wis., were discontinued as ports of entry, effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated February 25, 1927, Akron, Ohio, was created a port of entry in customs collection district No. 41 (Ohio), with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated August 19, 1927, Coos County, N. H., at that time a part of customs collection district No. 1 (Maine and New Hampshire), with headquarters at Portland, Me., was made a part of customs collection district No. 2 (Vermont), with headquarters at St. Albans, Vt., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated September 22, 1927, Lancaster, Minn., was created a port of entry in customs collection district No. 34 (Dakota), with headquarters at Pembina, N. Dak., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated September 30, 1927, Alpena, Charlevoix, Detour, Escanaba, Houghton, Mackinaw, Manistee, Marine City, Marquette, Muskegon, St. Clair, and St. Joseph were abolished as ports of entry in customs collection district No. 38 (Michigan), with headquarters at Detroit, Mich., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated October 8, 1927, Oklahoma City, Okla., was created a port of entry in customs collection district No. 45 (St. Louis), with headquarters at St. Louis, Mo., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

All of the above changes were dictated by consideration of economy and efficiency in the administration of customs and other statutes, with the enforcement of which the customs service is charged, as well as the necessities and convenience of commerce generally.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, establishing the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, I submit herewith the thirteenth annual report of the committee for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927.

Attention is invited to the remarks of the committee on the death of its late chairman, Dr. Charles D. Walcott, on whose advice the committee was established by the Congress in 1915. At a time when there was but little appreciation of the value of aeronautics and but slight conception of its problems, Doctor Walcott had the vision to see the need for organized scientific research on the fundamental problems of flight. The establishment of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the development of its usefulness in the formulation of policies, and the results of its labors in the field of research are a tribute to the leadership of Doctor Walcott, and stamp him as a great constructive force in the upbuilding of American aeronautics.

The technical improvement in the performance and efficiency of aircraft for all purposes, the policy of the Government in the regulation and encouragement of aviation, and the great impetus given to aeronautical development during the past year by the transoceanic flight of Lindbergh and others have combined to cause a broader recognition of the practicability of aircraft as a means of transportation that I believe is destined to play an ever-increasing part in the advance of civilization.

The attention of the Congress is invited to Part V of the committee's report, presenting a summary of the present state of aeronautical development. It is gratifying to note the committee's opinion that aeronautical progress in the United States during the past year has surpassed the hopes of a year ago, and that the present governmental policy is primarily responsible. I concur in the committee's judgment that further substantial progress in aeronautics is dependent largely upon the continuous prosecution of scientific research.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. EDGE presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

House Concurrent Resolution 1

[Passed senate March 7, passed house January 31]

The one hundred and fifty-first Legislature of the State of New Jersey begun and held at the city of Trenton, on Tuesday, January 11, 1927

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of a Federal law regulating the shipment of machine guns, revolvers, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons, and the ammunition adapted thereto, in interstate and foreign commerce

Whereas stricter supervision in the matter of the sale, shipment, and importation of revolvers, machine guns, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons will materially aid in the suppression of crime; and

Whereas the Federal Government by reason of its exclusive control in interstate commerce may regulate the shipment and importation of revolvers, machine guns, automatic rifles and other deadly weapons: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

1. That the Congress of the United States be memorialized for the passage of a Federal statute prohibiting the shipment of revolvers, machine guns, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons in interstate and foreign commerce.

2. Resolved, That copies of this memorial, signed by the speaker of the house of assembly and attested by the clerk thereof, be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States; and further, that copies so signed and attested be transmitted to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ANTHONY J. SIRACUSA,
Speaker of the House of Assembly.

Attest:

FREDERICK A. BRODESSER,
Clerk of the House of Assembly.

Mr. McLEAN presented the petition of the Y's Men's Club, Y. M. C. A., of New London, Conn., praying the passage of legislation looking toward flood prevention in the Mississippi River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Amston and Coventry, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the compulsory closing of barber shops in the District of Columbia on Sunday, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of Griffin A. Stedman Camp, No. 6, Sons of Union Veterans, of Hartford; L. D. Penfield Camp, No. 16, Auxiliary to Stanley Post, No. 11, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Britain; Elisha Kellogg Camp, No. 18, Sons of Veterans of Thomaston; Alden Skinner Camp, No. 45, of Rockville; and T. B. Robinson Camp, No. 31, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, of Bristol; all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of legislation to transform the old Ford Theater in the city of Washington into a museum to house the Lincoln relics recently purchased by the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate Resolution No. 2, submitted by Mr. NORRIS on Monday last, opposing the seating of WILLIAM S. VARE as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I fully realize my utter inability to say what I think ought to be said in this Chamber this morning, but, wisely or unwisely, I have convinced myself that it is my duty to try to say in my feeble way a few things which I think should be said.

In the first place, Mr. President, I want to call to the attention of the Senate, if I can, the exact position which it now occupies before the American people. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]—and we all recognize the Senator's ability and his high purpose—in his statement with regard to the pending resolution told us that Mr. VARE is a bad man and that there is no question about it. The then Governor of Pennsylvania sent to the Senate a communication in which he tells the Senate that Mr. VARE is a bad man and that there is no question about it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]—and I think he is a credible witness; I know no man in the Senate who has superior abilities or finer instincts—tells us that these charges are without foundation. Now it is proposed that this controversy be recommitted to a special committee and they are to do the best they can to find out whether Mr. VARE is a good man or a bad man. In the meantime it is to be assumed that he is a bad man.

The Senator from Pennsylvania called our attention to the fact that in ancient days in England, in Judge Jeffreys's court, a man was presumed to be guilty until he could establish his innocence and was treated accordingly. If my recollection serves me correctly, Dante, in his Inferno, tells us that a similar policy prevails in the courts of that region. So to-day we have Satan and the Senate as the two—I trust the only two—living protagonists of this policy. I think I may be pardoned for saying that personally I do not like the association.

That is not all, Mr. President. For more than four centuries the humblest citizen charged with a crime in Anglo-Saxon circles has been accorded certain preconviction privileges, and first among them is the right to be tried by a disinterested court. I think we know that that privilege can not be granted to Mr. VARE. I am sure I need not go into the history of the forces that established that right to demonstrate its wisdom.

I think we all realize that there is a good reason why civilized nations to-day defend the humblest citizen, his life, his liberty, his property, and, above all, his good name against interested and arbitrary political officials. It has been said, and well said, I think, that in every country to-day the value set by that country upon the good name of the citizen is the measure of the degree to which it has become civilized.

I do not know why the framers of the Constitution made this body the sole judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, but they did it, and it is unimportant for us to inquire into the reasons. They may not have anticipated the rapid development of political parties, with their bitter rivalries and antagonisms. It may be that they felt that inasmuch as a disinterested, unprejudiced court for the trial of contested-election cases could not be had in this world, the power to work an injustice might as well be left in the numerous and supposedly great and good Senate as in a tribunal consisting of one, two, three, four, or even five judges; but the fact remains, Mr. President, that if the title to a seat in the Senate is questioned that question can not be tried by a disinterested tribunal; that under the Constitution, which we all love and respect and sometimes obey, if that question is raised it can not be tried by a disinterested court.

Let us take the case at bar. When we contemplate the vital importance of one or two votes in the organization of this body and in its subsequent proceedings we know that each and every Member of the Senate has a deep personal and political interest in the result of this trial. It may be, Mr. President, that each and every one of us can subordinate that deep personal interest to a still deeper sense of justice and right; but if we want to do it, if we want to evidence that purpose, my position is that we must indicate it by our conduct rather than by conversation, however eloquent and ornamental and oriental that conversation may be. If we want to demonstrate to the American people our intention to be as fair as we can be under the circumstances the way is wide open. It is not our fault that Mr. VARE is to be tried by an interested tribunal, and it is not his fault, but, if we want to do the best we can to give him a fair trial, the way is wide open.

Mr. President, that provision of the Constitution which requires a two-thirds vote to expel a Member from this body was one of the very few provisions that met with unanimous approval of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention. I think the vote of Pennsylvania was divided on the question of the jurisdiction, but on the question involved here every delegate from every one of the Colonies saw the wisdom of placing the right to a seat in this body upon as high a plane as that provided in the case of a judge of a district court. Every delegate from every Colony saw the danger of reposing in this body the power to impeach a Senator by a mere majority vote.

We have the power to do it. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in discussing this subject called the attention of the Senate to the fact that all administrative bodies and all courts have the power to play ducks and drakes with justice if they see fit. I admit that; but, Mr. President, to our everlasting comfort, it can be said that the instances are exceedingly rare where a court of consequence in this country has surrendered principle to expediency. This single fact has done more to strengthen and support and preserve the confidence of the American people in this Government than all of its other achievements in peace or in war; and I think we know that our courts must remain above suspicion if we are to remain a civilized people. It is my position that the Senate must remain above suspicion if this Nation is to fulfill its destiny.

Mr. President, shall we, the Senate of the United States, which claims to be the highest court in the world; shall we, who have power to remove Presidents and Vice Presidents and Chief Justices, the power to make and unmake courts and judges; shall we now, fired with partisan zeal, with heads void of facts and hearts filled with determination, hazard our reputation for honesty of purpose while we are demanding that no man of dishonest purposes shall become a Member of this body?

Mr. President, that is all I have to say. The Senate can endure the presence of Mr. VARE. It can not endure a series of political lynchings, I care not how certain the promoters may be that they are avenging the outraged purity of this Republic.

If this controversy is brought before the Senate as it should be, in harmony with the sacred and revered traditions of this body; if this controversy is brought before the Senate in harmony with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, my vote will be controlled by the evidence; but if the resolution now pending is forced to a roll call, I shall consider the good name of the Senate of far greater consequence than the good or the bad name of WILLIAM S. VARE.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I know it is unnecessary for me to disclaim any intention of discussing the pending resolution from the standpoint of constitutional interpretations; and yet, as I have considered the entire subject, I think in most, if not all, its phases, I am convinced that even a layman can formulate an accurate opinion concerning some of the questions involved.

I am not going to discuss, I repeat, just what the word "qualifications" as contained in the Constitution means. I am of the opinion, however, that if the framers of the Constitution had intended the qualifications for admission in this body to extend beyond age and citizenship and residence, they would have said so. I recognize that leading authorities take both that position and the counterposition. But there is one other word that to me surely can have but one interpretation contained in the paragraph in Article I, which in effect—I have not the language before me—states that the Senate shall have power to decide the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members. I want to emphasize particularly the word "members." To me "members" can only mean what every one, I think, has always accepted as the meaning.

In Webster's Dictionary, among other definitions of the meaning of the word "member," is recited the following:

> Member: One of the persons composing a society, community, or party; an individual who belongs to an association.

There can not be any question as to the meaning of that definition. It is not a quibble to emphasize that word in this debate. How is it possible to pass upon a Member's qualification until he becomes a Member? You can not dismiss a man from membership until he becomes a Member. In my judgment the use of that word clearly shows that the framers of the Constitution—as has been stated by other Senators reaching their conclusions, perhaps, from other premises—meant that a Senator elect must first be placed upon precisely the same basis as those who try him. Questions of qualification beyond those clearly defined in the part of the Constitution to which I have referred are questions of a proper qualification to retain membership after the Senator elect has been sworn in and is on a basis of equality, so far as membership is concerned, with those who will judge his qualifications.

I agree absolutely with the splendid address of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday, in which his conclusion—reached, perhaps, from another basis, or upon other grounds—was substantially the same. Each of the States, under the Constitution, is entitled to two Members in the Senate. We, without any question of a doubt, have the full power to decide whether these Senators, as Members, are qualified to remain as Members of this body but not to deny them admission.

The discussion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in speaking to his resolution, was almost entirely devoted to the alleged expenditure of money or illegal practices in the primary campaign. As I followed it, there was very little reference to the constitutional right of a Senator elect first to become a Member. I believe these two questions should be absolutely divided. I should like to vote, and will vote, as I have, as far as the resolution before us permits us to do so, to admit a Senator elect with proper credentials at any and all times; and I will just as readily vote to refer any protests or challenges as to his right to retain his seat to the proper standing committee, and withhold judgment until its investigation and report is before the Senate. But to dispose of a case of the highest privilege—in which class, of course, this question belongs—in this manner, combining the two issues, as it were, in one, seems to me unfair to two great States, as well as to those who have received the majority votes of the legal electors voting in those States.

As I have indicated, I do not think that should be the subject of discussion to-day; but if we are to debar a Senator elect from admission to this body mainly, as I take it, upon the ground of an alleged expenditure of money in amounts which are deemed immoral, then we owe it to the country, we owe it to every State in the Union, we owe it to every man or woman who properly is ambitious to become a Member of Congress or to serve his or her State or his or her country in an elective office that there should be a clear definition, based upon population, which we can not properly evade, in order that men will know what is considered an immoral expenditure and what is considered a justified expenditure.

As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] very ably pointed out yesterday, the great State of Pennsylvania, with practically one-tenth of the population of the Union, with an estimated population of approximately 9,500,000 people, with a legal voting population of approximately 4,000,000, can not in all justness be on the same basis in its total expenditures for election purposes as the State of Nevada or any other State of far less population. Roughly computing the expenditure admitted by Senator-elect VARE and those who were associated with him as candidates for office as about $800,000, and then giving proper consideration—which must be arbitrary, in a way—as to how much of the $800,000 should be charged to the Vare campaign in view of the many candidates running with him, let us arrive for purposes of comparison at an arbitrary figure, say, of $600,000.

If we admit that three-fourths of that entire expenditure, or $600,000, was particularly for the benefit of the nomination of Senator-elect VARE, under the circumstances we are certainly very liberal. With 4,000,000 legal voters, an expenditure of $600,000 would mean 15 cents per voter for educational and all other purposes. A heated political campaign justifies the presentation of the facts to the public. Fifteen cents per voter in Pennsylvania approximates, as I have said, $600,000. Fifteen cents per voter in a number of the smaller States of the Union, without attempting to consult the figures of population, would probably amount to in the neighborhood of five or six thousand dollars, or a little more.

I ask the question in absolute fairness, and with a desire at least to bring this question before the Senate in such a way that ultimately, I hope, some solution or decision can be arrived at: Would it be considered that a Senator for whose election a total of five or six thousand dollars had been disbursed in the same proportion that money was spent in Pennsylvania had been guilty of corruption, or that the total was immoral; that he was thus unfitted for admission to this body? It is a question which in all fairness we can not evade. The ratio must be fixed proportionately if we are to regulate primary elections, as I think many Senators believe we should; and I am inclined to a similar belief. Certainly a great State can not be fairly penalized simply because it is big.

In the resolution now pending there is recited in full the certificate from the then Governor of Pennsylvania, Governor Pinchot, together with a letter. Obviously, from the fact that it appears in the resolution, it is deemed by its proponent, the Senator from Nebraska, as an important argument against the seating of Senator-elect VARE. It is made a part of his case, his complaint, in other words.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was most generous and considerate in touching upon this phase of the situation as he did in that very quiet and modest manner for which he is noted. But is it not fair to emphasize the fact that if the expenditures as testified to by Senator-elect VARE as to his own disbursements, approximately $70,000, are correct—and I have not heard that that statement has been disputed—and the figures as turned in by Governor Pinchot, the former Governor of Pennsylvania, whose testimony is used as the leading evidence against Senator-elect VARE, something short of $200,000, are likewise correct, then the latter spent approximately two and a half times as much as the Senator elect in an unsuccessful effort to defeat him? If Senator-elect VARE's expenditures have been immoral because they have reached $70,000, then the man whose testimony has been used as the reason for excluding Senator-elect VARE has been two and a half times as immoral.

Mr. President, I said at the outset that it was not my intention to discuss in detail the alleged expenditures, because I assume that when the committee reports that will be one of the subjects of its report and will be the subject of debate finally. The committee will be charged with the investigation of that matter, and when the committee reports, we will, of course, have additional information and additional testimony which can be discussed.

I only wanted to put before the Senate, before the committee enter again upon their very important deliberations, that this country deserves to know—and in all fairness the man or woman who in the future will aspire to public office has a right to know—if expenditures are to be the main reason for exclusion, as the debate seems to indicate, what is to be the standard of justified or unjustified disbursements. When 33 men—that is what this action or precedent means, 32, a third, plus 1—can bar any and all applicants in the future when a new Congress assembles, it is well for us to carefuly consider our great responsibility; yes, and our great power.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in this appeal from Daniel to Noah Webster engaged in by the Senator from New Jersey. He proposes to settle all the constitutional questions by reference to the dictionary. Of course that is a very simple way.

I was also much impressed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who assured us that the devil has taken up his abode in the Senate. He did not tell when he was elected and from what State he came, but having such intimate knowledge of him, I presume he knows how to get him out.

I also want to call attention to the constitutional argument made yesterday by my very distinguished friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. It was truly a great argument. It was divided equally between the two contending forces, and either may read the half of it it likes the better and be governed accordingly.

As I gather from the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Connecticut, and also the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN], if one shall present his credentials, purporting that he has been selected as a Senator from one of the 48 States, his right to be seated is absolute, that the Senate may look only between the four corners of the certificate; if it be regular as to form, he is entitled to be sworn in.

If that is not their position, I am unable to follow their argument at all, because if you may go back of that certificate for any purpose, if you may examine back of it to ascertain whether he was a resident of the State from which he comes, or whether he had been nine years a citizen of the United States, or whether he had attained the age of 30 years—if you can look back of it for any purpose, then you may go back of it to determine whether the Senator designate has the proper qualifications, as the Constitution gives the Senate the power to determine his election and qualifications for a seat in the Senate. It is obviously true that they must accept one or the other theory, either that if one present a certificate of election that is regular upon its face he is entitled to be sworn in, or they must concede that the Senate has the power to go back of his certificate to determine whether he is entitled to a seat in the Senate.

If we have no power whatever to go back of the certificate prior to the administration of the oath to the Senator designate, then anybody coming here with a certificate is entitled to be sworn in, although every Member of the Senate might know he was not a resident of the State from which he came; although they might know he was not a citizen of the United States; although they might know that he had not attained the age of 30 years. If we have no right to go back of the certificate, we must swear him in and then exclude him.

I doubt if anybody would like to go that far. In some unwatched hour Mr. Insull, who seems to have some control of the seats in the Senate for Illinois, might purchase a seat for the King of England, and the great mayor of Chicago then would have to put him out of the Senate, as he is putting him out of Chicago. [Laughter.] I hope they will not impose upon him the additional duty of guarding the Senate after guarding the city of Chicago against foreign invasion by the King of England. Yet, as absurd as the proposition seems to be, if the contention of these gentlemen as to the Constitution is correct, that we can not look back of the certificate; when a man comes here with a certificate proper as to form we must admit him, and then determine his right to a seat. There is no use dodging the question. Let us be perfectly candid. Let us say that his certificate gives him the absolute right to be sworn in, or the Senate has the right to go back of the certificate and determine whether or not he has the qualifications necessary to entitle him to a seat.

I am frank to say that I do not agree with some of my colleagues about the Governor of Pennsylvania having the right to give to the Senator designate a certificate in which the question of the legality of his election is raised. I do not concede the Governor of Pennsylvania has that right. I do not think the governor of any State has the right to say whether an election was fair or unfair. If he has, then the Senate itself is not the exclusive judge of the election and qualifications of its Members, but the governor of the State from which a Senator elect comes shares that responsibility. Therefore I have not agreed with some of my colleagues who have thought that the governor's tainted certificate was entitled to be received and considered. I do not agree that a governor has the right to issue such a certificate. I think that all he has to do is ministerial, to certify that a man was or was not, apparently, upon the face of the returns, elected.

Therefore it makes no difference to me what kind of a certificate is brought here if it certifies that the man was elected. If that is all there is in it, I think he ought to be seated. But inasmuch as I contend that the Senate is the judge, and not the Governor of Pennsylvania, I think the Senate may inquire into the things that preceded the issuing of the certificate of election. If it has not the power to inquire into that before the Senator is seated, it has not that power after he is seated.

To me it would seem the height of absurdity to say that the Senate has no right to guard itself against the admission of an improper person, but has a right, after he has been admitted, to expel him; in other words, that a Senator designate has more right in this Chamber than a Senator who has been sworn in. That seems to me to be such an absurd conclusion that I hesitate to treat seriously anyone who takes that view of it. To deny that the Senate has the right to guard itself against the admission of an improper person, but the absolute and unqualified right to exclude him after he has been admitted, seems to me to be, as I said before, too absurd to be considered.

Let me refer a moment to this question of the use of money, about which my friend from New Jersey is so much disturbed. The Senator from Pennsylvania stated he was not prepared to criticize the expenditure of $1,800,000 for his colleague when he and his colleague were making an effort to return him to the Senate. Pennsylvania went on record in 1921 on the questions of expending money in elections. A Democrat had the certificate of election to the House of Representatives from a Pennsylvania district, and was deprived of his seat because a committee with which he had no connection and of which he had no knowledge expended a few thousand dollars in his behalf more than the act of Congress then prescribed.

Every Republican Member of the House from Pennsylvania who voted at all voted to exclude him except one. Strange to say, one Member from Pennsylvania voted to seat him. Every Republican Member of the House from Illinois who voted at all voted to exclude him because of this expenditure, and, like Abou Ben Adhem, leading all the rest was the Senator designate from Illinois [Mr. SMITH], then a Member of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report of the committee upon which the action referred to by the junior Senator from Arkansas was taken disclosed that personally Mr. McLane expended $748.04, but that a campaign committee expended $11,749. In its report the committee says:

> The committee therefore finds that the contestee, Patrick McLane, must under the law be held to have had constructive knowledge——

Mr. CARAWAY. Although he had no actual knowledge.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (continuing)— > of expenditures made in excess of the amount permitted under the corrupt practices act. For that reason, in accordance with congressional precedent and as a matter of principle, he is not entitled to his seat in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. CARAWAY. And all the Republican Representatives from Pennsylvania who voted at all voted in accordance therewith with that report except one. As I said a moment ago, Mr. SMITH, then a Member of the House from Illinois, had himself recorded in the affirmative when that question came up for consideration.

My friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania, says that Mr. VARE should not be held accountable for the $105,000 which the governor spent for his own campaign; though how he could spend that for his own alone when they ran as partners I do not know.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They did not run as partners until the campaign was nearly over.

Mr. CARAWAY. They ran that way when they were spending the money.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that the Mr. McLane in the House, about whom the Senator has been speaking, was sworn in by the House, and was then tried and denied his seat?

Mr. CARAWAY. But the question is this: The Senator said yesterday that the $105,000 of which Mr. VARE knew nothing should not be charged to him when every Republican Member of Congress said a Democrat was charged with constructive knowledge of every dollar that might have been expended in the campaign in which he was interested.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the Senator will notice the difference. One was spent for Mr. McLane's candidacy, but the other was not spent for Mr. VARE's candidacy.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was spent on the candidates for governor and for Senator and for the local candidates, so they say; but the point is that McLane knew absolutely nothing about it and yet they charged him with constructive knowledge of it, and Pennsylvania went on record that he was not entitled to keep his seat in the House because of that fact.

The Senator said he comes here with a mandate from the State of Pennsylvania, but there was a mandate saying that if these people spent money for McLane unrighteously because they said McLane must have constructive knowledge of its expenditure.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. It would seem also that that money was used largely for Mr. VARE, because his candidate for governor was defeated.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, he got more for his money than the governor got.

My friend the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] said that the Senator designate, Mr. VARE, spent a very great deal of money for educational purposes. I have read his campaign document. It consisted in declaring that "We want beer." That was the campaign of education. The man who has an educated appetite for beer does not require $800,000 to be expended to tell him that he wants beer. To talk about that being a campaign of education, even in Pennsylvania, is perverting the use of the term "education." From what I have heard about Pennsylvania, they do not need any education on the question of wanting beer.

I am not going to read what the Senator himself said about Mr. VARE when he was a candidate, although it makes interesting reading. I might mention it to show that he was not carrying on a campaign of education. The Senator said that "the questions on which he would be required to act are the live questions of tariff, immigration, taxation, banking, farm relief, railroad, foreign affairs, and shipping," and he said that of these the Senator designate knows nothing. Of course, I take for granted that my friend from Pennsylvania knew him and his limitation. If those were the questions about which Mr. VARE knew absolutely nothing, what use did he have for $700,000 to carry on a campaign of education?

Mr. REED of Missouri. How could he represent Pennsylvania? How much is Pennsylvania deprived of?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not answer the Senator from Missouri as to how much Pennsylvania will lose by reason of the fact that the gentleman does not sit. I do not know.

It was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]—and I read his speech again to be certain that I could not be mistaken—that there was not a taint of suspicion attaching to this election. He was talking about both primary and general elections, but he was speaking particularly about the November election because he said the people in Pennsylvania gave him a mandate to stop an inquiry into that. The committee inquired into the primary, but he got a mandate from the people of Pennsylvania to keep it from that inquiry. Therefore he was alluding to the general election, and said no taint of suspicion attached to it. Then, modestly, he admitted that in his own city they had indicted 132 people for doing wrong in connection with that election.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, indeed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I probably did not talk loud enough for it to penetrate the Senator's consciousness, but I tried to tell the Senate yesterday that those indictments were based on irregularities in the primaries in September of this year. They have not any more to do with the case which the Senator is arguing than if they had happened 10 years ago.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the first time the Senator has said anything about it. Why should he be talking about what took place in this year when we are all talking about the election that was held last year?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because the challenge was made by somebody on the Senator's side of the aisle, and I answered the challenge, but the Senator apparently did not listen to the answer.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, I did; and I read it again this morning. Fortunately, if I can not understand a Senator when he talks, I can read the RECORD to see what he said.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I would not dream of contradicting the Senator, but I would be interested in having the Senator point out where in the RECORD he finds the statement he just quoted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

I do not know who Mr. Harry A. Mackey is, but he is somebody up in Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Manager for Mr. VARE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Manager for Mr. VARE?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. God bless his soul! [Laughter.] Therefore I guess he is entirely credible, is he not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He is mayor elect of Philadelphia.

Mr. CARAWAY. Since that time he is entirely credible. Here is what was said about him:

> Harry A. Mackey, in an address at Scranton, is credited with the statement that 225,000 votes could be changed in 10 minutes by sending a marked ballot to the 1,492 voting precincts. Roper and other officials of the Pepper-Fisher headquarters claim they have unearthed a series of favorite methods used by the Vare machine—

I hope I will not be held responsible for the "Vare machine"— > in past elections for defrauding the voters of an honest election vote and count.

Mr. Mackey ought to know. He was VARE's campaign manager.

Roper warns all voters to be on guard next Tuesday to prevent such tactics.

The magical methods of rolling up Vare totals is described as the "floating ballot." It is put into effect, according to Roper, when a Vare sympathizer enters the polling place and asks for a ballot. Upon receiving it, he enters the polling booth. Then he produces a blank piece of paper which is the same size as the regulation ballot. He marks the official ballot and folds it and the blank paper. The paper is deposited in the ballot box. The real ballot is later turned over to a Vare worker, who establishes a chain system by turning it over to a controlled voter, who, after he deposits it, returns the blank ballot over to the worker. This is then marked and handed to another "regular." In this way assistance is avoided and the Vare sympathizers waste no time in the booth.

That was the speech he made. I do not know whether I had better take his word when he makes a speech or not. He seemed to have some idea that is the way they hold elections in Pennsylvania. I do not know. I think one thing about Pennsylvania, and I say it with a great deal of admiration. It is the one Commonwealth in these forty-eight where they can confer upon one immortality. Get on the Republican voting list there and you will never die! [Laughter.] I think it even goes beyond that. It seems that a ripe banana voted very earnestly in this last election. [Laughter.]

But I did not intend to argue the question of the facts. I only rose to comment upon what seemed to me to be an utter inconsistency in saying that the Senate is clothed with the power to exclude those who are not properly elected and is utterly devoid of power to prevent those who are not properly elected from being first sworn in as Members of the Senate. That is a logic, if it be logic, which I can not follow. I would be as far from excluding one upon a charge as anybody, but here was a case in which the sworn testimony had been developed and both the Senators designate had appeared and testified, and from their own evidence they disclosed that they had made expenditures far in excess of what even the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], in his famous resolution declaring Mr. Newberry had been elected, could approve. He there stated that the expenditure of such large sums of money—$190,000—with or without the knowledge of the candidate, was dangerous to our institutions and hurtful to the dignity of the Senate, and therefore, following it to its conclusion, I thought that at least until some explanation of those expenditures should be made there was not any injustice done to the people of Pennsylvania and Illinois to let those Senators designate stand aside until the question could be developed. That is all we are doing here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the author of the resolution, and in his name I desire to perfect the text of the resolution as follows:

On page 2, first line, strike out the word "that" and in the same line, after the word "evidence," insert the word "which," so that as amended it will read:

Whereas the said committee has reported the evidence which—

And so forth.

As the committee did not report findings of fact, there is manifestly a clerical error or an error in expression which my amendment will correct. I have the authority of the Senator from Nebraska to perfect the text in this way, and ask that that be done.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no objection. May I inquire of the Senator in that connection whether, if it is his plan to amend the resolution so as to send this case for further inquiry, he ought not to agree to strike out the preamble entirely, because it completely prejudges the case which we are sending to a committee for a supposedly impartial investigation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I could not agree at this time to any arrangement of that character. I think the proponents of the resolution would desire a showing in the resolution, in the nature of a preamble, for the reference of the credentials. I think it would be improper to make the reference without that explanation, particularly in view of the fact that the resolution contemplates that the Senator designate shall not be seated until after the committee has reported.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely, but the Senator's resolution, as he plans to amend it, sends the case to a committee of the Senate with such instructions and findings of fact by the Senate as preclude any answer but one to the questions which are submitted to that committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think the preamble to the resolution as modified prejudges the findings of fact. I do not think it estops the committee in any way.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think it is too soon for me to make any motion on the subject, until the Senator has finished perfecting his resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. In the same way, for and on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska, I desire to further perfect the text of the resolution as follows:

Strike out the last resolve and insert in lieu thereof the following, the language being the same as that employed in the case of the Senator designate from Illinois except, of course, that the name of WILLIAM S. VARE appears in this amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. May we have it read?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (reading):

Be it further resolved, That the claim of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to said WILLIAM S. VARE and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible date; and that until the coming in of the report of said committee and until the final action of the Senate thereon the said WILLIAM S. VARE be, and he is hereby, denied his seat in the United States Senate.

And so forth.

I ask to perfect the text by the adoption of that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The text will be regarded as so perfected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to submit another amendment. It is the amendment which was offered yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in another case then pending before the Senate, and is as follows:

Add at the end of the pending resolution the following proviso:

"Provided, That the said WILLIAM S. VARE shall be accorded the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of being heard touching his right to receive the oath of office and to membership in the Senate."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, while the Senator is about it, would he not be willing to strike out, for the present at least, the first paragraph of the resolution, which declares unqualifiedly that the election was tainted with fraud?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall be glad to consider that suggestion after the amendment which I have just indicated shall have been disposed of and as soon as I have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator's pardon. I supposed he had the right to perfect the resolution in any way that he pleased.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not make the statement that I am offering this amendment in the name of the Senator from Nebraska. I am offering this amendment in my own name at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the resolution as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, if he has finished with his amendments, whether he would not consider also a further amendment requiring a report from the special committee within 60 days?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I would be very glad to consider such an amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator consider that in connection with my other suggestion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not able to answer that question immediately for reasons which I think must occur to the Senator. I do not know what the proponent of the resolution himself would think about such an amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am only suggesting it for the Senator's consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think, if the Senate desires to do so, that it might be very well to take a short recess in order that I may consider his suggestions.

Mr. CURTIS. Would a recess until 2 o'clock be sufficient?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That would be ample.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 2 o'clock, at which hour it reassembled.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate Resolution 2, submitted by Mr. NORRIS on Monday last, opposing the seating of WILLIAM S. VARE as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Fletcher	McLean	Shortridge
Bayard	Frazier	McMaster	Simmons
Bingham	George	McNary	Smith
Black	Gerry	Mayfield	Smoot
Blaine	Gillett	Metcalf	Steck
Blease	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Borah	Goff	Neely	Stephens
Bratton	Gould	Norbeck	Swanson
Brookhart	Greene	Nye	Thomas
Broussard	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Bruce	Harris	Overman	Tydings
Capper	Harrison	Phipps	Tyson
Caraway	Hawes	Pine	Wagner
Copeland	Hayden	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Heflin	Ransdell	Warren
Curtis	Howell	Reed, Mo.	Waterman
Dale	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Deneen	Jones, Wash.	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.	Willis
Edge	Keyes	Sackett
Edwards	King	Schall
Ferris	La Follette	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GILLETT obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment? With reference to the subject matter of the suggestions of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] for amendments to perfect the text of the pending resolution, I desire to make those at this time. However, if the Senator from Massachusetts prefers to make his speech first, I shall wait.

Mr. GILLETT. It makes no difference. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With respect to the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the time within which the committee may report be limited to 60 days, I have no objection to expressing the following limitation:

Within 60 days if practicable.

I would not be willing to charge the committee with responsibility to report within 60 days if a filibuster or other obstructive process is to be conducted against the proceedings of the committee. I feel that it would be absurd to hamper the Senate and its committee by requiring a report within 60 days if the committee, after all due diligence, should be unable to conclude its work. It will be recalled that the occasion for the further reference to take additional testimony is due, in part at least, to the fact that at the last session, when the committee asked for certain authority, when there was an overwhelming vote, apparently, in the Senate ready to give that authority, the Senate was prevented from registering its action on the resolution by a filibuster ably conducted against the amendment. We desire that the report may be made just as soon as possible, and we would like to have it made within 60 days if that is practicable; but for the reason I have stated I would not offer an amendment which would compel the committee to come in with its work unfinished, if it is to be obstructed and hampered in the performance of its duty. If the amendment as I have offered it is desirable to the Senator from Pennsylvania, I shall be glad to propose it; otherwise, I would prefer to let the text stand.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, I am going to offer a substitute for the entire resolution. If my substitute should meet the same fate as that met by the substitute of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] on yesterday, then we will come back to the resolution with reference to which the Senator from Arkansas is now suggesting an amendment. I think that it would be well to have in the resolution a 60-day limitation expressed in that way.

I am told by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that it will be possible for that committee to complete its count of the Pennsylvania ballots in 60 days. The Senate has already referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the election contest brought by Mr. Wilson. If the committee can complete that great work in 60 days, it would seem that it would be wise to have the report of this special committee also in the hands of the Senate at the same time. For that reason I offer no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am offering it to meet the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not care to offer it unless he would prefer to have the amendment made.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the resolution is to be adopted, I prefer to have the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I propose the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KING. Let the proposed amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the substitute offered strike out the words "at the earliest possible date" and insert in lieu thereof the words "within 60 days if practicable," so as to make the sentence read:

Resolved, That the claim of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said WILLIAM S. VARE and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate within 60 days if practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There are two other amendments which I intend to propose, as follows:

On page 4, line 3, after the word "Senate," insert the words "prima facie," and on page 4, line 10, after the word "Pennsylvania," insert the words "prima facie," so that it will read:

"Resolved, That the expenditure of such a large sum of money to secure the nomination of the said WILLIAM S. VARE as a candidate for the United States Senate prima facie is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, and, together with the charges of corruption and fraud made in the report of said committee, and substantiated by the evidence taken by said committee, and the charges of corruption and fraud officially made by the Governor of Pennsylvania, prima facie taints with fraud and corruption the credentials of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. President, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, but there is one phase of it which has not been expressed which goes far to determine my vote. Before casting my vote I wish to state my opinion. I appreciate that the Senators have made up their minds, that no argument can affect the result, and I shall be very brief.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on yesterday, with his usual force and thoroughness, discussed the question of elections to the Senate, and in his conclusions I concur, but there is a further point which I believe has great bearing on the subject which I wish to emphasize, namely, that the Senate has no right at all to consider the fitness of any Member elect except upon the three grounds specified in the Constitution—age, citizenship, and inhabitancy. I appreciate that the language of the Constitution may be interpreted in two ways; that it may be interpreted to limit our powers or it may be interpreted not to do so. It is ambiguous, and when the language of an instrument is ambiguous it is proper to consider the intention of its framers. In looking back to the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention and the atmosphere that existed at that time, I can not help believing that the framers of the Constitution never intended to support a proposition—and if such a suggestion had been baldly placed before them they never would have adopted it—to allow the Senate absolute and unlimited discretion to determine the fitness of Members elected to this body by the States.

We know that at the time of the Constitutional Convention the one great objection to the Constitution against which the persons who were advocating its adoption had constantly to fight was the jealousy of the States of Federal power. State rights then had a force and conviction which is unknown to-day. The marvelous success of our experiment in government has largely overwhelmed all opposition, but at that time there was an unconcealed fear of the Federal power not only in the Constitutional Convention, but in the State conventions when the States came to ratify the Constitution. So great was that opposition that the Constitution was only ratified, as we know, by a very narrow margin, because of the feeling of State rights and the unwillingness to concede power to the Federal Government. It was only by concessions in the way of amendments which limited Federal power that the ratification of the Constitution was finally obtained.

It seems to me inconceivable that as to the Senate, which was then looked upon as the citadel of the rights of the States, where every State had equal representation, those men in that atmosphere, if the proposition which is advocated to-day had been put before the Constitutional Convention, it would never have adopted it. I believe that had it been advocated that the Senate should have the power to decline to seat any Member elected by any State for any reason which it saw fit, that such a proposition would have been overwhelmingly rejected. It is practically the argument to-day that we can reject anybody elected to the Senate if we think he is unfit, no matter whether or not his State may have condoned any alleged offense or impropriety.

Take the cases before us to-day. In both States the objections which are made here on the floor of the Senate to the seating of these Members elect were well known to the voters. The Senate committee had made its investigation, and I do not think publicity was shunned as to the results of that investigation. The facts were well known throughout the States. Knowing those facts the States sent these men to the Senate. Consequently, it seems to me, inasmuch as these men meet the three qualifications which the Constitution provides, that it is our duty to accept them, and we have no right on the ground of unfitness to say that they shall not be admitted to the Senate.

I appreciate that this is the unpopular side of the question; I appreciate that every instinct of selfishness would urge a man to take the other side. I confess that I have great sympathy with that third of the Senate who will come up for election next year and who are now confronted with this issue and must take a public stand upon it, because we have seen in the past how powerful an issue it can be made. Against them it can be said that they are on the side of wealth and corruption and that they are not willing to stand for the purity of the ballot.

I can conceive that Senators against whom their rivals have no issue, who have a certainty of nomination and election, might well feel that here is an issue that could be raised against them, and that it would have great force and danger. I, fortunately, am not in that position, but I can see the embarrassment and the pressure that must come upon every man who stands in that unfortunate attitude.

I do not believe that the doctrine announced in the Newberry case by the Senate is sound doctrine. As I understand, that was a simple statement that the amount of money which was spent constituted an impropriety and was dangerous to the perpetuity of the Nation. In my opinion it is not the amount of money which is spent but the purpose for which the money is spent which determines whether the expenditure is corrupt or whether it is proper. The sum of $100 spent to corrupt and purchase a vote would be more reprehensible than $1,000,000 spent for legitimate purposes of information and advertising. We should not forget that this is the age of advertisement. The use of money in elections has been increasing, and I regret to say has become more and more necessary, I believe, to a successful contest. Why? Not because the people are more corrupt, not because the money is spent directly to influence the people, but because this is the age of publicity, and expensive and helpful methods of publicity have been discovered.

I noticed this morning in the Washington Post that the people of the impoverished flood districts of the Mississippi have inserted a whole page advertisement, which must have cost a handsome sum, for the purpose of impressing the people at large with their needs. Every good as well as every bad object and purpose appreciates the value of publicity, and every man entering a campaign appreciates it.

In my section of the country—I do not know how it is elsewhere—I believe the improper use of money is much less common than it was a generation ago. I remember when I was a young man that the purchase of votes was not unknown, but now I never hear of such a thing. In my section I do not believe there is now any corrupt use of money in the sense that votes are purchased or the electorate is corrupted; but indirectly it is used in the way of advertisement, in the way of propaganda. We all agree that what we want is a ballot uninfluenced by any selfish consideration, yet in my opinion the use of money, so far as interfering with the integrity of the ballot is concerned, is not comparable with race prejudice, or class prejudice, or religious prejudice, or, in the great cities, with organizations which all through the year give out patronage and offices and work and charity and then on election day demand and receive obedient votes. That all interferes with the purity and integrity of the ballot, and in my opinion vastly more than does the use of money. But the question always in my mind is not how large a sum of money has been used but for what purposes it has been used. The adoption of the primary system has largely increased the need of the expenditure of money. A man who, instead of appearing before a convention where he would probably be known to the delegates, has to bring himself before the constituency of a whole district or a whole State necessarily seeks to make himself known, and that requires advertisement, information, propaganda. So long as it is legitimate and proper information it is useful; it encourages and educates the public. Of course, if money is used corruptly everybody would denounce it, and if the charge of corruption is proved it is sufficient to invalidate the election; but the mere amount of money is not of itself, it seems to me, necessarily a subject of criticism, although I appreciate that on the stump resounding attacks will be made.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if he does not think the amount of money expended is a pertinent question, what chance he thinks Daniel Webster would have had for election to the United States Senate from a State where there was expended in the primaries $1,800,000?

Mr. GILLETT. I think Daniel Webster would have been elected in Massachusetts if he had not spent a dollar.

Mr. GLASS. After a while he would have been, perhaps; but when he was a poor man and had to borrow $50 from a bank what chance would he have had of election against an opponent who could spend $800,000 in an election?

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, the man who can obtain publicity, and has the money to obtain publicity, has a tremendous advantage, and any young and poor man is at a disadvantage against such an opponent.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator think that ought to be so?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not see how we are going to prevent it. I do not see why it is improper.

Mr. GLASS. We have not prevented it; but does not the Senator think we should prevent it?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think we ought to punish a man for legitimate advertising.

Mr. GLASS. No advertising for a political office is legitimate which costs $800,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That depends, of course, on the size of the constituency. As the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] suggested this morning, nobody would think of objecting if a candidate in Nevada spent $6,000. We would not think that was illegitimate, and yet $6,000 in Nevada is as much as $800,000 in Pennsylvania.

Mr. GLASS. Suppose we back away from the theory of the thing now and get down to a practical question. Does the Senator believe that anybody in Pennsylvania knew any more about W. S. VARE after the expenditure of this $800,000 than he knew before?

Mr. GILLETT. I certainly do.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator does?

Mr. GILLETT. I certainly do.

Mr. President, I only wish to repeat that, in my opinion, the Senate has absolutely no right to pass upon the fitness of these men except from the standpoint of the three qualifications which the Constitution provides.

Mr. GLASS. Right on that point may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. If that be so, how does the Senator account for the fact that the original draft of this particular provision of the Constitution was affirmative and that the second draft was negative—that is to say, in the nature of disqualification rather than in the nature of asserting a qualification? Furthermore, how does the Senator account for the fact that with respect to the provision of the Constitution which says that each House of Congress shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members, when Mr. Randolph proposed a property tax it was objected to by Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, upon the ground that to assert any one disqualification might preclude either branch of Congress from considering other disqualifications.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not remember that last incident, but I went carefully through the deliberations of the constitutional convention last winter, and, while I recognize that some actions pointed one way and some the other, I concluded that on the whole nobody would have dared on the floor of the convention to have proposed such an open claim as is now made.

Mr. BLEASE obtained the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat I should like to ask him a single question, because I want to put myself in a position to feel the full force of his contention.

Suppose the fact should be developed, between the time of the election of a Senator and the time he came here to take his seat, that he was a thief or some other grossly flagitious kind of criminal. Does the Senator mean to contend that nobody, neither the State from which he came nor the Senate of the United States, would have the power to exclude him from a seat in this Assembly?

Mr. GILLETT. Do I understand the Senator to say after his election?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes. Suppose the fact that he was a thief was developed between the time that he was elected and the time that he came here to take his seat. I ask the Senator, would we be legally expected to sit beside him and to breathe for six years in this Chamber the amosphere that he breathed?

Mr. GILLETT. Not at all; but we would be expected to seat him, because we have no right under the Constitution not to do so; and then we would have the right to expel him.

Mr. BRUCE. That is denied by Mr. JAMES M. BECK, who has prepared probably the ablest dissertation on the subject of this debate from his side of the question that anyone has done. He claims, the Senator will recollect, that the Senate has no power to expel except for some cause that has arisen in the course of the discharge of the duties of the Senator.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not recollect that Mr. BECK said that; and, while I have great respect for Mr. BECK, I should certainly differ from him if that was his position.

Mr. BRUCE. I think the Senator will find, if he gives a little more thought to the subject, that with his premises it is impossible to escape that conclusion. Mr. BECK'S conception is that the right of the Senate to expel is a purely disciplinary right—that is to say, a right of the same general nature as the right to punish a Member of the Senate for disorderly behavior. I ask the Senator again, assuming that that is so—

Mr. GILLETT. I do not agree that that is so.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator does not?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly I do not. Of course, I appreciate that both sides of that question have been taken.

Mr. BRUCE. That multiplies my difficulties. I do not know exactly what I have to meet. One of the protagonists of the two applicants for seats here takes one view, and, as I understand, that view has very considerable support among the partisans of Mr. VARE and Mr. SMITH; and now we find the Senator from Massachusetts taking a radically dissimilar view. What view are we to take?

Mr. GILLETT. Obviously, each Member of the Senate—as has been shown so clearly that it is hardly necessary to refer to it—takes his own view.

Mr. BRUCE. Then I will take the view of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator recalls, of course, that explusion can be effected only by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly; and that was the very purpose, it seems to me, of that provision. In such a case as the Senator has used as an illustration there would be no question about a two-thirds vote, I should suppose; and it is for just such cases, in my opinion, that the power of expulsion is given.

Mr. BRUCE. That is to say, no matter how infamous the applicant for the seat was, no matter whether he was a thief or an embezzler, the Senate would have no choice except to administer the oath to him and admit him to his seat, and then to expel him afterwards by a two-thirds vote?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly I take that position. Of course, the Senator is suggesting, as is generally suggested to make an argument, an extremely improbable case. It might happen, of course; and in that extremely improbable case there is a remedy, as I say.

Mr. BRUCE. That is to say, after the Senator is seated the Senate could proceed to do what it would seem in all propriety it should have done before when the applicant appeared here?

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly.

Mr. BRUCE. I say it is impossible that the framers of the Constitution could have formed any such narrow conception of their duty as that. When they provided that the Senate should be not simply the judge, as the Senator from Arkansas said this morning, but the sole judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members, I assert that they intended to use the word "qualifications" in a sense that would meet all exigencies of every sort that might arise in relation to the misconduct or the evil repute of a Senator elect.

That is to say, if the Senator is right, we are to admit a thief, knowing that he is a thief. We are to admit him as a thief, desecrate our oath of office by administering it to him, seat him in his seat with every ceremonious gesture that belongs to the ordinary proceedings of a parliamentary body, but all with the intention of unseating him, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] so appositely suggests. I say that can not be.

Mr. GILLETT. In our experience of over 100 years no such instance as that has ever happened. It probably never will happen. The Senator, of course, can conceive something that is quite embarrassing; but, in my opinion, it is quite beyond the bounds of probability, although I have given what I think is a sufficient answer to it.

Mr. BRUCE. Why, Members of Congress have been charged with the perpetration of criminal offenses after they have come here, and those criminal offenses have been made the basis of proceedings against them in Congress. There is more than one precedent of that sort. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WATSON. But, Mr. President, does the Senator know of a single instance where a man has been excluded from the Senate on any such ground?

Mr. BRUCE. I can not recall any specific instance. I do not profess to have any remarkable degree of familiarity with the precedents relating to this subject; but the statement was made here the other day, and was unchallenged, that in 18 instances the Senate has refused to administer the oath to a Senator elect and to admit him to a seat in this body.

Mr. WATSON. That was because of irregularities in the credentials, or because he lacked some one of the essential qualifications.

Mr. BRUCE. Not at all, as I understand. No such contention was set up. I do not believe it can be set up.

Mr. WATSON. Then I challenge the correctness of the statement, because it can not be shown that that is true. In other words, I will say to my friend, he has not examined the precedents. Except in the time of the Civil War and the period immediately following the Civil War, the hectic conditions of society immediately after that great struggle, the precedents are absolutely uniform that where a man came here with regular credentials, possessing the regular qualifications as shown by those credentials, he has been sworn in.

I remember in one case where it was charged over on the House side that some man was a moral monster. That was the charge made against him—that he was a moral monster.

Mr. BRUCE. That is no charge at all.

Mr. WATSON. But they proceeded to specify. It might not be in these days a charge. It was then considered something.

Mr. BRUCE. You do not have to resort to any generalities of that kind in the State of Indiana, I am sure.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. James A. Garfield rose up to say:

> Is there anything in the Constitution to show that the people have not the right to elect a moral monster if they want to? If a moral monster is elected, and comes here regularly authenticated, it is our duty to swear him in.

Mr. GLASS. There is something in the Constitution that gives us the right to exclude him, though.

Mr. WATSON. Provided his credentials are not regular, and provided he comes here not clothed with the three essential qualifications prescribed in the Constitution of the United States.

Of all the great men who have ever dealt with this subject from the foundation of the Government up to this hour I want the Senator to name me one man who has taken a contrary position. From Madison and Monroe and Hamilton and all the men who dealt with that proposition in the Constitutional Convention up to this very hour, where is there a man who has taken the contrary position?

Mr. BRUCE. All I know is that eighteen times——

Mr. WATSON. No; I challenge the statement.

Mr. BRUCE (continuing). The Senate has refused to administer the oath to applicants for seats in this body. Let the Senator produce the 18 precedents. But the Senator attaches to the credentials of which he speaks a finality that I do not attach to them. As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] argued this morning, I think that any effect which would ordinarily attach to the credentials that the governor of a State sends here with reference to a Senator are overridden by the power that the Senate has as the sole judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members. It has the right at any time that it pleases, without reference to the credentials that come here from any governor, to say whether or not a Senator shall be admitted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Indiana has made a challenge, and he has made it entirely too broad. Two great Senators expressed an opinion contrary to that which he asserts is the universal opinion of great men, including himself.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. From Daniel Webster to James E. Watson.

Mr. WATSON. I am very glad to say that I am happy to follow the precedents established by that great man, from which he never departed, while my friends on the other side, after having for over 140 years stood for the doctrine of State rights, have yesterday for the first time utterly abandoned it and cast it on the scrap heap.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think this debate should degenerate into a partisan or a political discussion. I think the remarks of the Senator from Indiana are calculated to promote that end. He made a challenge which I accept. I think Trumbull, of Illinois, was a great man and a great Senator, and I think Charles Sumner was a great man and a great Senator.

Mr. WATSON. They both were.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then the Senator concedes that the two men to whom I have referred were great statesmen.

Mr. Trumbull is quoted as making this declaration:

> It is not true that credentials have not been referred before parties have been sworn in in the Senate. Usually, where the credentials were fair upon their face, the person claiming a seat has been sworn in as a Member; but there are cases where the credentials themselves were referred, cases where Senators were refused their seats, and where Senators received their seats after the credentials have been referred.

Mr. Sumner is quoted as making this declaration:

> It is said that the proposition now before the Senate is without a precedent. New precedents are to be made when the occasion requires. Never before in the history of our country has any person appeared to take a seat in this body whose previous conduct and declarations as presented to the attention of the Senate gave reasonable ground to distrust his loyalty. It belongs, therefore, to the Senate to make a precedent in order to deal with an unprecedented case. The Senate is at this moment engaged in considering the loyalty of certain Members of this body; and it seems to me it would poorly do its duty if it admitted among its Members one with regard to whom, as he came forward to take the oath, there was a reasonable suspicion.

Mr. Sumner laid down the doctrine that one whose conduct and acts showed him to be disloyal was not entitled to be sworn in; and I undertake to say that if one came to the door of the Senate now confessing himself to be a traitor within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States there is not a Senator in this body who would dare vote to seat him for one moment.

The Constitution, in the clause referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, does not define loyalty to the flag or to the country as one of the qualifications prescribed for Senators.

If the Senator from Maryland will indulge me for just a moment more——

Mr. BRUCE. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will make a statement upon that subject which I think will help clear up the constitutional phase of the question; I hope it will. I realize that Senators who have reputations as lawyers have discussed this subject, and that some of them have expressed a different conviction from that which I entertain. But I undertake to say that the language in the Constitution of the United States which declares that "No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years, and been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State for which he shall be chosen," is not the equivalent of a declaration that any person who has been a citizen of the United States for 9 years, and who is 30 years of age, and who is, at the time of his election, a resident of the State for which he is chosen, is necessarily qualified. The difference in the two declarations is apparent to any one. In my judgment, it does not require a constitutional lawyer to make that distinction.

The three conditions named in the Constitution are disqualifying conditions, rather than qualifying conditions. No one can be a Senator who is not 30 years old, no one can be a Senator who has not been a citizen of the United States for 9 years, and no one can be a Senator who is not a resident of the State for which he shall be chosen at the time of his election. But that does not mean, it does not imply, that one who is a self-confessed criminal, or one who is disloyal to the country, shall be a Senator if he possesses the three qualifications to which I have referred. It is a matter of common sense as much as it is a matter of legal interpretation.

This opinion was expressed by one of the greatest men who ever served in this body, a lawyer of international renown, Elihu Root. He said, in a speech the echo of which still rings through this Capitol, that the power of the Senate to pass upon the qualifications of its Members is practically unlimited, and that the Congress itself can not impose a limitation on that power. He recognized, as all Senators should recognize, the obligation to exercise this power the more cautiously because of the fact that it was unlimited.

I undertake to say that the great danger to this country now is not that the Senate will abuse its power in passing upon the qualifications of its Members, but it is that it will fail to exercise its power, and the institutions of this Republic, the Senate itself, be undermined by the processes of corruption which, like slimy worms, cavern their way into the walls and towers of state in unsuspecting hours. Your danger and my danger is not so much that we will abuse our power but that we will be servile and fail to exercise it.

There is no question here of denying the right of equal representation to the States. The question is whether a Senator designate has been chosen and is qualified. Equal representation does not always mean full representation. I grant you that such an application of the law and of the Constitution should be made as will give, whenever practicable, the full representation of a State, but I make the assertion that those who invoke the equal-representation clause of the Constitution are practicing a subterfuge. Neither in this case nor in any other that has ever come before the Senate of the United States has there been an attempt to say that Rhode Island shall not have as many Senators as Pennsylvania, but the proposition is, when one presents himself at the door of the Senate, whether the Senate can determine the question of his qualifications.

Senators have said that the right to exercise that power begins only after the Senator elect has been sworn in. I challenge any lawyer to give a reason why such an interpretation should be placed upon the Constitution. If the power is practically unlimited, it attaches from the beginning, it attaches when the Senator designate presents himself, and it is an absurdity of which Senators should not be guilty to say that the facts are such that they will vote to unseat a man but in some mysterious way are compelled by the Constitution first to vote to seat him. If Senators have received evidence which, in their opinion, would justify them in finally voting to unseat a man, it is a senseless act, which no constitution or law requires, to vote first to seat him and then vote to unseat him.

I thank the Senator from Maryland for yielding to me.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, yes; I suppose the Senator has, although I am not sure whether the Senator from Maryland or the Senator from Massachusetts had the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] has the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from Arkansas has anticipated so completely my argument——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I want to apologize to the Senator for taking his time.

Mr. BRUCE. Not at all. I will not say, as I intended to do, that the Senator has not only stolen all my thunder, but all my lightning.

In reply to the Senator from Indiana——

Mr. WATSON. Inasmuch as my friend, the Senator from Arkansas was replying to me, may I not say a word?

Mr. BRUCE. No; I am sorry I can not yield now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina was recognized. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLEASE. With great pleasure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BLEASE. I want him to get his speech off his system.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not catch what the Senator said. I know, however, that it was just a pleasantry.

Mr. BLEASE. I said I wanted the Senator to get his speech off his system.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator is always so extremely courteous that I knew that what he said was something of that nature.

The Senator from Indiana was referring to the case of Mr. VARE as well as that of Mr. SMITH, as I understood his remarks, and I simply wish to say this, first of all: What he was saying hinged largely on the claim that in the Vare case we have unimpeachable credentials emanating from the governor of the State, and that those credentials are entitled to the highest degree of respect; in other words, should be given prima facie effect, and that Mr. VARE should be allowed to take the oath and occupy his seat.

So far as the Vare case is concerned, I desire to remind the Senator from Indiana that Mr. VARE does not turn up here with irreproachable credentials. He turns up here with a certificate from the Governor of Pennsylvania that his title to a seat in this body, whatever it may be, was partly bought and partly stolen. Is that the conception of unimpeachable credentials that the Senator from Indiana entertains?

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator suffer an interruption there?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. My understanding is that the credentials issued by Governor Pinchot stated that Mr. VARE appeared to be elected, but the credentials themselves say nothing about purchase.

Mr. BRUCE. You can not separate them.

Mr. WATSON. He wrote a letter.

Mr. BRUCE. You can not separate the letter from the credentials; it is one indivisible document the Senator will find when he comes to examine it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The credentials of Senator-elect VARE were sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the committee, as I understand, reported that his credentials were valid upon their face. I understand that that is the record upon which we are now proceeding.

Mr. BRUCE. I have been here too long to accept as gospel every report that comes from a committee, even when the distinguished Senator from Idaho happens to be one of its members.

The point I make is that the Senator from Indiana errs when he makes the statement—I will not say the rash statement—that Mr. VARE, at any rate, came to this body with unassailable credentials. He did nothing of the sort. I believe that afterwards some sort of certificate was obtained from Governor Fisher.

Mr. WATSON. Some sort? Was not the one sent by Governor Fisher in regular form, the kind that is always sent?

Mr. BRUCE. Was it in order?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. A title must be bad, indeed, when it takes the certificates of two governors to confirm it.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator knows very well that Pinchot was one of the candidates against VARE. Everybody understands that.

Mr. BRUCE. I also know that Mr. Pinchot enjoys the reputation of being an honorable and public-spirited man.

Mr. WATSON. That is a matter I am not going to discuss.

Mr. BRUCE. I say that with pleasure, because of the fact that I differ profoundly from him with reference to many public questions.

Mr. WATSON. I myself have differed long with Governor Pinchot on most public questions, and I am not going to discuss him.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator has disagreed with him so long that he is not able to do him justice.

Mr. WATSON. I decline to discuss that question, because it has not anything to do with the case. But the fact about it is that he was an opponent of VARE, and the fact is that he himself spent $187,000 in this campaign, which was as much as we expelled Newberry for expending.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not saying that Mr. VARE partly bought and partly stole his seat. God forbid! His case is to be referred to a committee, he is to have the fullest opportunity to present any testimony to that committee which he may choose to present, and he is to have the further opportunity to appear upon the floor of the Senate and to make his personal appeal to the Senate as best he can; and until that time, I propose to reserve my opinion as to his case.

I had no intention in the world of making an address to the Senate when I rose, but I do wish to say one thing in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]; and he knows that there is no Member of this body who entertains a deeper feeling of respect for him than I do.

The Senator from Massachusetts seems to think that the views of the framers of the Federal Constitution with respect to State rights were of such a very pronounced, unreserved character that it is impossible to conceive that they could have intended to confer upon the Senate the power to exclude a Senator elect on such grounds as those on which it is proposed to exclude Mr. VARE or Mr. SMITH.

I say that in many respects the framers of the Federal Constitution exhibited quite as sedulous a degree of tenderness for the rights and the powers of the Central Government as they did for the rights and powers of the States, and in no respect does the Federal Constitution manifest a more cautious and a more circumspect spirit than it does with regard to the control that Congress is to have over persons who are certified to it as duly elected by their States.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Suppose we concede all that for the purpose of the argument, that the Senator from Maryland is right in his contention——

Mr. BRUCE. I will say to the Senator, do not concede too much, because then I shall not have an opportunity to say anything at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Starting afresh, suppose, for the purpose of the argument, we concede all that the Senator from Maryland has said as to the right of the Senate to expel a Member, before or after he is sworn in, for any cause which, in the judgment of the Senate, seems sufficient. Suppose we concede that now for the moment. That is not the question with which we are confronted to-day. The Senator from Arkansas, by his amendment to the resolution, has shown that there is at best only a prima facie case against Mr. VARE; has shown that it is necessary to refer it to a committee of the Senate to make further investigation and a definite report; that in the meantime we have no conclusions to act on, but only the presentation of one side of the case. When the record is in that condition, how could the Senator justify the action of the Senate in refusing to administer the oath?

Mr. BRUCE. The record is in that condition because the Senator from Pennsylvania and his associates chose to interrupt the orderly course of investigation by that special committee, as I am informed, and endeavored to do it, first, by an absolutely indefensible filibuster, which has met, so far as I can see, with the universal condemnation of the country; and then attempted to do it by starving the committee out; and now the Senator from Pennsylvania is here claiming that he is not being given his day in court. If he has not been given his day in court, that fact is chargeable, as I see it, entirely to the Senator from Pennsylvania—he and those who cooperated with him in the Vare controversy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BRUCE. I will.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the filibuster last March was a sin, I am answerable for it, with the others who took part in it. If it was the fault of the Democrats that important legislation failed, as the RECORD shows it was, they are answerable for that. But Mr. VARE was not in the Senate, the people of Pennsylvania were not in the Senate, and it is their rights which we are discussing now. If the Senator wants to punish me for my record, the time will come when he can do it, but that is not the question before us now. Will the Senator, as a lawyer, answer this question: Does he feel that on a prima facie showing like this there is any justification for the Senate denying to Pennsylvania temporarily—60 days or 90 days, or whatever it may be—the equal representation which the Constitution guarantees to us?

Mr. BRUCE. First, I would like to say that the State of Pennsylvania was in the Senate. It was here in the person of its two Senators, and therefore it and the people of Pennsylvania are responsible for what those Senators did.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator please answer the question I asked him?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; but I was dealing with one thing at a time. Should Mr. VARE take his seat, I do not know whether the people of Pennsylvania would be represented in this body or not. I shall have to have some more light touching the circumstances surrounding that primary and election in Pennsylvania before I shall be prepared to admit that.

As I understand it, the special committee met and afforded an opportunity to everybody who craved one to present any testimony he pleased. Everybody who wanted a day in court could have had that day in court. As I imagine, all the testimony that could be adduced on either side of the controversy would have been adduced at this very moment but for the obstruction worked by the attitude of the Senator from Pennsylvania and his associates.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator would have liked it better if we had been less efficient.

Mr. BRUCE. Though I do not profess to have any critical degree of familiarity with the testimony in this case—I have not had an opportunity to analyze it closely enough to make that claim—yet there is enough in the record now, in my opinion, to justify the Senate in reaching the conclusion that the oath should not now be administered to Mr. VARE and that Mr. VARE should not now be allowed to take his seat, though he should be allowed the privilege of bringing forward any further testimony that he may choose to bring forward and even to come upon this floor in his own person to make his plea for his seat.

There is another thing which I hope will be done. I do not know whether it is the intent of the committee to do it or not, but I trust that the general political conditions now prevailing in the city of Philadelphia will be developed by the committee, because I say without any hesitation that those conditions are a disgrace, I trust not an indelible disgrace, but a disgrace to the entire people of the Nation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Has the Senator ever been in New York?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes, I have; and I have walked the streets of that city with the exultant pride of an American citizen, if for no other reason, because there was a time when it had just such a corrupt government as the city of Philadelphia has, and because its people had the courage, the independence, and the manhood to bring that corrupt government to an end, as the city of Philadelphia has never done. They always kept up the eternal note of protest, and there never was a time, no matter how depraved the political conditions in New York City were, when its noble people did not prove themselves worthy of the heritage of a free people by their unceasing remonstrance against misgovernment and political abuses in every form. Nor do I ever thank God more fervently than I do when I recall the fact that while for many years there was also misgovernment in the city in which I live, Baltimore, fostered not by Republican but by Democratic agencies, I was so fortunate finally as to be one of the instruments, though only an humble one, by which that misgovernment, too, was terminated.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I hesitated to interrupt the Senator, because he had made such a beautiful defense of New York.

Mr. BRUCE. I am earnest and sincere in it.

Mr. COPELAND. But I must in all humiliation say that the Republicans up State are still voting the tombstones, "immortalizing," as Senator CARAWAY says, the Republican voters in that part of the State.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not know that.

To get back to the line of comment I was about to make, nothing is more manifest on the face of the Federal Constitution than the intent of its framers to give Congress the very largest measure of power in determining for itself whether any man who comes to Congress with the credentials of the governor of his State has really been elected or not, or really deserves to hold a seat in Congress or not.

Why, just recall the different provisions of the Federal Constitution in that connection. First of all, it says that the States shall have the power to regulate the times, the places, and the manner of holding election, but that these regulations may be altered by Congress except as to places for the election of Senators. In other words, so far as the time and the manner of holding elections for Congress was concerned, the central Government was by the Federal Constitution given complete residuary control. There is also the provision, of course, that the House and the Senate shall be the sole judges of the elections, the returns, and the qualifications of their Members. There is also the provision bestowing on the two Houses the power to punish any Member of either House for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, to expel a Member.

How, I ask, could the intent of the framers of the Constitution to take practically everything relating to the election of Senators out of the hands of the States, and to lodge them in the hands of the Federal Government, have been more plainly evinced? So what should really be contended for in this debate is not the power of the States over the elections, the returns, and the qualifications of Members of the Senate but the rights and powers of the General Government. The framers of the Constitution thought that it was essential to the dignity, the efficiency, and the usefulness of Congress that no considerable degree of residuary power should be left in the States with respect to the elections, the returns, and the qualifications of Members of Congress in either House.

So I submit that the strict principle of State rights which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] invoked has no application here. What we should be jealous about in this discussion is not the rights and powers of the States but the rights and powers of the Central Government—that is, the rights and powers which are essential, as I have said, to the maintenance of the dignity, the efficiency, and the usefulness of the two Houses of Congress. I affirm that every principle of sound reasoning denies the proposition that a State might elect some individual to the United States Senate; and that yet even should the fact be disclosed between the time of his election and the time that he applied for his seat, that he was a thief, there would be no power anywhere—neither in the State itself nor in the Federal Government—to get rid of him.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to take the position that the Constitution places no limit upon the power of the Senate in passing upon the qualifications of Senators?

Mr. BRUCE. I think practically none.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Addressing the Senator as a historian familiar with the formation of the Constitution and with the various steps which were taken and proceedings had in the then original thirteen States to ratify the Constitution, may I ask him whether he thinks that the convention which met in Richmond, Va., for example, in which one of its most distinguished members was Patrick Henry, would have ratified the Constitution if it had been even suggested that the Senate of the United States had unlimited power or jurisdiction to fix and pass upon the qualifications of its Members?

Mr. GLASS. Virginia never would have ratified the Constitution at all if it had followed the advice of Patrick Henry.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Of course, that is true; but what would have been done if such a suggestion had ever been made?

Mr. BRUCE. I will say, so far as Patrick Henry was concerned, of course, he opposed the adoption of the Federal Constitution anyway, though happily his great eloquence did not prevail.

However, I say without hesitation that in my opinion James Madison as well as John Marshall, who was also, of course, a member of that Constitutional Convention, would not have hesitated one moment to give their approval to the proposition that, so far as any question relating to the election or return or qualifications of a Senator was concerned, it was the intent of the framers of the Federal Constitution to bestow, for all practical purposes, absolutely unlimited, unconditional power upon the Senate, and, if for no other reason, because otherwise it would have been in the power of the States not simply to have discredited but to have, more or less, brought to shipwreck the operations of the Federal Government.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland permit me to make merely a further brief observation?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Not now but perhaps on some other occasion I shall undertake to demonstrate to others, if not to convince the learned Senator from Maryland, that as of the time of the meeting of the Virginia convention and of the one in Albany and in each and every of the other 13 States held to consider and pass upon that great instrument, there was not one member in any one of those conventions who ever advanced an argument along the lines of those which the distinguished Senator from Maryland is now presenting.

I will go further, if I may, and undertake to demonstrate that the States as of that time considered themselves absolutely sovereign, and that they had the power, which was admitted on all hands, themselves to choose their Senators, but that they voluntarily limited their power by providing that those whom they should choose should be of a given age, a certain period of citizenship, and an inhabitant of the State. For the moment I wish merely to throw out this thought—that the instrument before them did not create the States; the Federal Government in a sense is the creature, the States the creator; and sovereignty does not rest here in the Senate, but does rest in the people. I therefore confess respectful surprise that learned gentlemen, supposed to inherit the fundamental principles of Jefferson and of Jackson and the long line of great men, their predecessors, will take a position now which I think is in direct hostility and contrary to those fundamental principles entertained by those who framed and adopted the Constitution and which have been adhered to down to this hour.

Mr. BRUCE. I will say to the Senator from California that I am just as much opposed to any undue encroachment by the States upon the rights and powers of the General Government as I am to any undue encroachment by the Federal Government upon the rights and powers of the States. I say that the great men who framed the Federal Constitution realized that it was essential to the proper workings of Congress that it should be clothed with practically unlimited discretion over every question relating to the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Will the Senator pardon me a further interruption?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did not rise to advance my views now; they have been indicated by my vote. I am not thinking of persons. I am not thinking of the individuals who are rapping at this door. I am taking the position I should take if the State of Maryland were rapping at that door, or if Virginia or Georgia, which so quickly and unanimously ratified the great instrument, were rapping at that door. I am thinking of the great quasi-sovereign States of the Union, of my own great State of California; not of these individuals. The Senator from Maryland and I will pass away, but our Nation, we hope, will be immortal; and it can not be unless we preserve the constitutional rights and recognize the quasi-sovereignty of the individual 48 States.

Mr. BRUCE. I will say that no argument for the purposes of this discussion should be suggested by the thought that this extraordinary power of Congress might be abused. So far as that is concerned, it is in the power of the States themselves at any moment, by general concert, to bring the entire Federal Government to an end simply by refusing to send any Members of Congress here at all. The workings of every constitution presuppose the fact that men will be sane enough, patriotic enough, and dutiful enough not to handle the machinery of government in any respect in a perfectly arbitrary, irrational, and tyrannical way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland permit an interruption?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Maryland is always very fair and usually very accurate in any statement which he makes. I think, however, that it has escaped the learned Senator that in the detailed draft of the Constitution as it was submitted to the constitutional convention this provision was submited:

> SEC. 2. The Legislature of the United States shall have authority to establish such uniform qualifications of the Members of each House, with regard to property, as to the said Legislature shall seem expedient.

That was antagonized by Mr. Madison, and his opposition to that and to any provision which would permit the National Legislature to fix the qualifications of any of its Members is stated as follows:

> Madison opposed the proposed section 2, Article VI, "as vesting an improper and dangerous power in the Legislature. The qualifications of elector and elected were fundamental articles in a republican government and ought to be fixed by the Constitution. If the Legislature could regulate those of either, it can by degrees subvert the Constitution.
> "A republic may be converted into an aristocracy or oligarchy as well by limiting the number capable of being elected as the number authorized to elect. In all cases where the representatives of the people will have a personal interest distinct from that of their constituents there was the same reason for being jealous of them as there was for relying upon them with full confidence when they had a common interest. This was one of the former cases."

If the Senator will pardon me, Mr. Madison insisted that the provision in the Constitution as it left the committee on detail and went to the committee on style committed to the Constitution itself all the qualifications, which were the three to which the Senator has referred. Mr. Madison further insisted that neither the National Legislature nor the States could superadd qualifications or disqualifications to those three which were incorporated into the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BRUCE. Well, I confess that all that has not recently, at any rate, been brought to my attention, but we must consider that what was said there was said in the light of the particular proposition with which Mr. Madison was dealing. I imagine that he was dealing with the proposition that was made when the convention was pending, that the States should nominate certain persons for the Senate and that then the Senate should make the selections. Is not that true?

Mr. KING. The proposition which the Senator is now discussing had been disposed of anterior to that time. The Senator is right as to that proposition having been made, as well as various other propositions, but they had been eliminated, and the question was then as to whether the qualifications should be fixed in the Constitution, whether they should be left in the States, or whether they should be left to the Senate and the House, respectively. Madison's contention was—and that was the contention of Mr. Hamilton, as evidenced by repeated statements in the Federalist and also by statements made by Mr. Madison in his signed articles—that the Constitution should fix the qualifications and that the qualification should not be left either to the Senate or to the House.

Mr. BRUCE. Then, under those conditions, who was to have the power to repel or to expel a Senator elect who was deemed unfit to hold a seat in the Senate?

Mr. KING. I do not propose to go into that argument, because it would take too long, but I invite the attention of the Senator——

Mr. BRUCE. The very fact that the Senator can not answer that point——

Mr. KING. I can answer it.

Mr. BRUCE. The very fact that he can not answer that question shows the logical consequences to which he is giving his approval.

Mr. KING. The Senator is drawing an improper deduction from the observation which I made. It would take some little time to go into that discussion, and I did not want to infringe upon the Senator's time; but the point can be answered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maryland if the argument or the thought suggested by the Senator from Utah as well as by the Senator from California does not lead to the conclusion that the Senate has no power, if the claim of the Senator elect from Pennsylvania shall be conceded, ever to go any further into the case; that the presentation of the certificate ends the matter, provided the three conditions or qualifications set forth in the Constitution have been met? In other words, if we can not now do what it is proposed to do, it can not be done at all.

Mr. BRUCE. The most that could be done would be to expel, and, as I have already said, Mr. BECK takes the position that no cause for expulsion can exist unless it arises during the course of the term of a Senator.

Now, just a few words more in conclusion. I think it not unlikely that when the entire case of Mr. VARE shall be presented that it will be found to rest on somewhat different questions from the case of Mr. SMITH. So far as Mr. SMITH is concerned, I have never experienced a single impulse of hesitation as to what I should do in his case. I do not profess to be anything more than an ordinarily honorable man. I think that I am that. When I made up my mind to become a candidate for the United States Senate I was the general counsel for the Public Service Commission of Maryland, which is just such a body as that in Illinois of which Mr. SMITH was chairman.

Though the office was eminently agreeable to me in every respect, and my election was by no means a certainty, I felt that it was my duty to resign it, and I did resign. Yet here we have a man so completely lost to every consideration of political and social decency as to continue to act as the chairman of a commission clothed with the power of regulating the rates and working rules of the public-utility corporations of the State of Illinois, and to receive hundreds of thousands of dollars toward his campaign expenses from the head of the public-utility interests of that State!

I will say that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] simply gave expression to his own manly, brave, incorruptible character when he said that under such circumstances Mr. SMITH was merely a pecuniary investment as a candidate for the Senate.

I want to see the fullest measure of justice dealt out in both cases. I think that the managers of the special committee acted very properly in affording the opportunity to Mr. SMITH and holding out the prospect of an opportunity to Mr. VARE to address any additional testimony that either one of them may choose to offer before that committee, and in giving to each the opportunity to appear upon the floor of the Senate and to make their personal appeals. When the Senate has done that it has done all that could be expected under the circumstances. The idea that when two men are laboring under such grave accusations as Messrs. SMITH and VARE the oath of office should be administered to them, and they should be admitted to their seats before the accusations shall have been disposed of, is, in my judgment, an idea both morally and legally untenable.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I have been somewhat amused at the statement that if a traitor or a thief or a felon were to present himself at the door of the Senate, the right of the Senate to turn him back would be questioned. I think the Constitution settles that question without the Senate having anything to do with it. The Constitution itself, if I read it aright, disqualifies a man in that situation as a citizen of the United States, and he is not competent to hold any office. Therefore that question would be settled without the Senate having to pass on it at all.

Then I think it rather peculiar that Senators would presume that a State of the American Union, in its part sovereignty—which is all it has to-day—would be so low down, and its citizenship would so disregard the rights of other States, as to elect any such person to come here to the Senate; and I think that alone should settle that question.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss or debate this matter. I only wish to read into the RECORD South Carolina's position in it.

I have already said all that I care to say in reference to the seating of the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH, Senator elect from the State of Illinois, and the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, Senator elect from the State of Pennsylvania; and my position on these matters is well and thoroughly known to the people of the State which I have the honor to represent on the floor of this Senate.

I have absolutely no apology to make for my position, nor for any word or act that I have said or done in reference thereto; but I present in further proof of the strength of my position the senate journal of the State of South Carolina, 1927. On page 1046 of that journal the following will be found:

WEDNESDAY, March 23, 1927.

The Hon. W. C. Hamrick, of Gaffney, senator elect from Cherokee, appeared in the chamber and presented his credentials, which were as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
By the Secretary of State.

To the honorable President and Gentlemen of the Senate of South Carolina:

Pursuant to the provisions of law I have the honor to submit herewith a report of the special election held in Cherokee County on Tuesday, March 22, 1927, for the purpose of electing a State senator to fill the unexpired term of the Hon. Richmond Stacy, deceased.

The returns from the county board of canvassers show that there were 1,131 votes cast at the said election, and that of said number—

W. C. Hamrick received	535
E. H. De Camp received	466
W. D. Kirby received	113
Mrs. B. M. Sparks received	17

Respectfully submitted.

[SEAL.] W. P. BLACKWELL,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
By the Secretary of State.

To W. C. HAMRICK, Gaffney, S. C.:

Whereas, in pursuance of the constitution and the statutes of the State, an election was held on the 22d day of March, A. D. 1927, for Senator for Cherokee County, and upon examination of the returns which have been received and by the determination and declaration of the board of State canvassers, filed in this office, it appears that you, W. C. Hamrick, have been duly elected by the highest number of votes. I do, therefore, by virtue of the power in me vested, certify that you, the said W. C. Hamrick, have been declared duly elected as senator from the county of Cherokee.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, in Columbia, this 23d day of March, A. D. 1927, and in the one hundred and fifty-first year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] W. P. BLACKWELL,
Secretary of State.

The president read the following telegram to the senate:

GAFFNEY, S. C., March 23.

Lieutenant Governor BUTLER,
Statehouse, Columbia, S. C.:

I hereby protest the seating of Hamrick until the vote is officially counted.

ED. H. DE CAMP.

On motion, the Hon. W. C. Hamrick was presented at the bar of the senate so that the oath of office might be administered by the president.

Mr. McColl addressed the senate as follows:

* * * * * * *

"My understanding of the power of the senate is that it has absolute control over the legal requirements of its members, to be determined by the process of referring it to the committee on elections, and prima facie, all we have to act upon is the certificate of election which, I understand from the Chair, is in regular order, and on that showing being made he is entitled to be sworn in.

"Both sides have the right to appear here later, and if it is determined he is not entitled to be seated, then the senate decision as to the rights of the parties is the judgment of the senate."

The oath of office was administered to Mr. Hamrick by the president, and thereupon assumed his seat as senator from Cherokee.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, when the Senate of the United States was in session, the senate of South Carolina was in session. A member of the State senate died, and an election was ordered to fill that vacancy. The Hon. W. C. Hamrick was elected. His seat was contested by Mr. Ed. H. De Camp, editor of one of the Gaffney papers. He went to Columbia with his attorneys, ready to make a contest before the senate. They requested that Hamrick be not sworn in until this contest or protest was heard. The senate immediately administered to him the oath of office, taking the position that I take here and have taken all along, that they had no jurisdiction of him and no right to hear any contest or protest in reference to him until he was seated. By the way, it was charged in part of those charges that Mr. Hamrick had used too much money in having himself elected to the State senate. Later, the contest was filed.

Mr. President, on page 1270 of the same journal will be found the committee report, as follows:

Committee report

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 6, 1927.

The committee on privileges and elections, to whom was referred the matter of the election of the senator from Cherokee County, respectfully report that they have duly and carefully considered the same, and recommend that the whole matter be referred back to the board of county canvassers for Cherokee County, with the request that said board do canvass the election and certify the result thereof to the senate, sending therewith a copy of the testimony taken at such canvass, and that at such canvass any candidate shall be permitted to be heard in person or by counsel, and that such board take such testimony bearing on said election as they deem necessary.

Senator SUMMERS, for Committee.

On page 1271 of this journal the following resolution appears:

Whereas the committee on privileges and elections, to whom this matter was referred, have recommended that a canvass of said election be had; and

Whereas the senate alone is the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members and, therefore, has exclusive jurisdiction of said contest; and

Whereas at the hearing before the committee aforesaid it was announced on behalf of the contestant, and also on behalf of the senator from Cherokee, that a canvass of said election was desired: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate, That the sergeant at arms of the senate do forthwith procure from the board of canvassers of Cherokee County the original ballot boxes containing the ballots, poll lists, and the election returns at the election held in Cherokee County on March 22, 1927, and deliver the same to the committee on privileges and elections, who shall, with all convenient speed, count the ballots cast at said election and make report thereof to the senate.

This resolution was adopted.

Final action will be found in the report of the committee on privileges and elections on page 1464 of the journal, April 15, 1927:

Report of committee on privileges and elections

The committee on privileges and elections, to whom was referred the matter of the seating of the senator from Cherokee, after a full and complete investigation, report that they have carefully considered the matter and find that the Hon. W. C. Hamrick has been properly seated.

S. J. SUMMERS, for Committee.

On motion of Mr. Williams, the report was adopted and made the judgment of the senate.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is seen that the Senate of South Carolina at their session in 1927 unanimously indorsed my position in toto in the Smith-Vare cases.

I desire to call further attention, however, to the action of the convention of the people of the State of South Carolina, held in city of Charleston, on the 12th day of May, 1788:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA:

In convention of the people of the State of South Carolina by their representatives, held in the city of Charleston on Monday, the 12th day of May and continued by divers adjournments to Friday, the 23d day of May, A. D. 1788, and in the twelfth year of the independence of the United States of America.

The convention having maturely considered the Constitution or form of government reported to Congress by the Convention of Delegates from the United States of America, and submitted to them by a resolution of the legislature of this State passed the 17th and 18th days of February last, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to the people of the said United States and their posterity, do, in the name and behalf of the people of this State, hereby assent to and ratify the said Constitution.

Done in convention the 23d day of May, A. D. 1788, and of the independence of the United States of America the twelfth.

[SEAL.] THOMAS PINCKNEY, President.

Attest:

[SEAL.] JOHN SANDFORD DART, Secretary.

Immediately following that, in that convention, the following resolution was adopted:

And whereas it is essential to the preservation of the rights reserved to the several States and the freedom of the people under the operations of a General Government that the right of prescribing the manner, time, and places of holding the elections to the Federal Legislature should be forever inseparably annexed to the sovereignty of the several States. This convention doth declare that the same ought to remain to all posterity a perpetual and fundamental right in the local exclusive of the interference of the General Government, except in cases where the legislatures of the States shall refuse or neglect to perform and fulfill the same according to the tenor of the said Constitution.

This convention doth also declare that no section or paragraph of the said Constitution warrants a construction that the States do not retain every power not expressly relinquished by them and vested in the General Government of the Union.

* * * * * * *

Resolved, That it be a standing instruction to all such delegates as may hereafter be elected to represent this State in the General Government to exert their utmost abilities and influence to effect an alteration of the Constitution conformably to the foregoing resolutions.

Done in convention the 23d day of May, A. D. 1788, and the independence of the United States of America the twelfth.

[SEAL.] THOMAS PINCKNEY, President.

Attest:

[SEAL.] JOHN SANDFORD DART, Secretary.

* * * * * * *

It will therefore be seen, Mr. President, that the position of South Carolina by her representatives in convention assembled in 1788 and in 1927 is my position in the Smith-Vare cases now and has been all through the controversy; and as their representative, in carrying out the instructions and mandates as heretofore cited, I am but obeying the will of my people and advocating that for which all of them have ever stood.

I noticed in the Washington Post of this morning, December 8, 1927, a little editorial which I want to read. It is headed:

ILLINOIS LOSES ITS RIGHTS

Fifty Senators voted yesterday to exclude the Senator elect from Illinois. As only 32 Senators voted to seat him, the action of the 50 becomes the action of the Senate. The Senate temporarily denies to Illinois its equal representation in the Senate.

The State of Illinois can be permanently deprived of its two Senators with as much justice as it can be deprived of them for one hour.

No State in the Union can be sure hereafter that it will be represented in the Senate by two men of its own choice.

The inquiry into the Smith case will proceed, with one of the States of the Union unable to exert its equal powers in the making of laws and treaties. During the inquiry the Nation's business is to be transacted, but Illinois will have less than a State's right to participate in the business. All other States will have two votes to Illinois's one.

The Senator elect from Illinois has been granted the privilege of appearing as a private citizen, without a Senator's rights or powers, to plead for the seat to which he is entitled. Having convicted him in advance, the Senate will now consider the evidence in his case. Mr. SMITH should stand upon his rights as a Senator elect and should refuse to enter the Senate Chamber except upon his way to take the oath.

The State of Illinois is not required by the Constitution to ask permission of the Senate to admit its Senators.

Evidently, a majority of Senators stand ready to exclude the Senator elect from Pennsylvania also. Very well; if Senators already seated can exclude one Senator elect they can exclude all newcomers.

Ignorance, cowardice, and partisanship have combined to commit the United States Senate to a violation of the Constitution. It is a melancholy exhibition of the Senate's rapid degeneracy during the last few years. Apparently very few of the clear thinkers in that body gave any consideration whatever to their constitutional duty in this matter. The whole Senate is tainted by the action of a little more than half of is membership.

If a town council or a county board of supervisors should convict one of its memebers first and then provide for trying him afterwards it would make itself a subject of ridicule and contempt. But no town council or board of supervisors has made such a blunder. Only the Senate of the United States has done so.

Mr. President, I object to the words "The whole Senate is tainted by the action of a little more than half its membership." No act of any man or set of men anywhere can cause another to be tainted unless he be a party to that act. For instance, Mr. President, I do not think the other Disciples were tainted because Judas Iscariot took 30 pieces of silver. It reminds me of a little incident down in my State. We had a man for governor who was very much opposed to lynching, and he said he was going to stop it. On one occasion they were fixing to perform that ceremony on a negro who had assaulted a white woman. The governor found it out and jumped in his automobile and rushed to the scene just as fast as he could go. When he got there he found a crowd and also the victim. He got up and made a beautiful speech, a wonderful speech, and just as he was about two-thirds through one of his great friends who was standing looking up at him said, "Hurry up, Governor. You are making a beautiful speech, but we want to lynch this nigger and get back to our work." They proceeded to carry out the job. I do not think that the people who were there taking no part in the lynching were responsible, and I do not think this paper ought to charge us who voted the other way on this question as being tainted with what somebody else did.

Mr. President, an hour ago I walked across the rotunda of the Capitol and I saw the American flag drawn back from the statue of the vice president of the southern Confederacy, Alexander Hamilton Stephens. I could not help wondering if Alexander H. Stephens were sitting in this Chamber instead of out there in marble what he and Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson and the thousands of Confederate soldiers who followed the leadership of Jefferson Davis and others, and who stood with their breasts bared to the bullets and the bayonets of the enemy—now our friends, I am glad to say—would say if they could see the sons and grandsons of Confederate soldiers sitting on the floor of the United States Senate and voting to deprive a State of the Union of its constitutional right to have two representatives on the floor of this body.

Mr. President, I may possibly be wrong. I am not censuring any man for his vote on this question. It does not make any difference to me personally whether you seat these gentlemen or not; it does not affect my seat. I am already in, and it would take two-thirds to put me out of the Senate. But I am interested in South Carolina. I am interested in the State of the American Union that first seceded from it. I am interested in the State which passed the acts of nullification, and I am interested in the future Senators elect who will come to the door of this Chamber from the State of South Carolina and may be told that they shall not enter. And on what grounds?

It has been said by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the Senate has a right to regulate primary elections for the nomination of Senators to this body. It has been hinted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that that will be done. When a South Carolinian comes to the door of this Chamber and a Republican comes by his side and says, "I contest this man's seat because he deliberately kept the colored people from voting at the ballot box," I ask the Senate if they are going to stand him outside there, as they are doing SMITH and VARE, and investigate whether that is true or not? If they do, some people may not get in here. Some may be here now who would not be here if every man 21 years of age who could read and write the constitution of his State and paid his taxes had been allowed to cast his vote, even though his skin were black. Is that question to come back here and haunt the Senate again? Is the black cloud again to rise? Is that what is meant by the statement that primary elections can be regulated? Is that what is meant by the statement that primary elections will be so regulated? Then I ask some gentlemen what their votes will be when a South Carolina Senator comes here and is stopped at the door because of my State's noncompliance with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

As I have said, personally I do not care what you do, but it is laying down a very dangerous precedent. I still maintain that these two gentlemen should have been sworn in. I shall ever so contend. I maintain that when they were sworn in, if there was a protest or a charge of dishonesty or a charge of wrongdoing, that question should be tried as the Brookhart matter was tried; it should be tried as other cases have been tried and then should be turned out of the Senate if corruption were proven; and I will vote to put both of them out if it can be proven to me that they have spent one dollar to corrupt the ballot box.

Illinois knew all about FRANK SMITH, and they elected him. I presume Pennsylvania knew all about Mr. VARE, and they elected him. But surely no man would stand on this floor and say that the only places in the world where there are corrupt elections are Pennsylvania and Illinois. Surely no man will stand on the floor of the Senate and say he came here without him or his friends spending money. If he did, he must have come in the darkness of the night, and Senators know it.

How much did Mr. Pepper spend? I sought to get that information, but I never could get it. How much was spent by the combination that tried to beat VARE?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLEASE. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has neglected to read the report of the committee. That information is given there. But I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BLEASE. I want the figures, and I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am sure the Senator wants to get the matter correct.

Mr. BLEASE. I want to have in the RECORD a statement of what VARE spent, and what was spent to beat him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Pepper-Fisher expenditures, excluding the expenditures that were exclusively for Fisher, were $1,804,979. That is stated in the report.

Mr. BLEASE. I thank the Senator. Mr. VARE, I think, claims he spent about $600,000. Yet you are going to kick VARE out of the door, a man who spent only $600,000, and let a man appoint his successor who admits he spent over a million to get to be governor of his State. Where is the honesty in that? It is proposed to throw one man out for spending $600,000, and say to a man who spent a million and more in a conglomerated pot, you might say, like a poker pot, mixed up with dimes and nickels and quarters, "You are more corrupt than this other man, you spent more money than he did, your gang got you in, but we are going to put out a man spending less money, and give you, the man who spent more to corrupt the ballots of Pennsylvania, the power to appoint his successor." Is that consistent?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator pardon just another interruption, to enable me to give him the figures accurately? I do not care to discuss the matter or to interrupt the thread of his statement.

Mr. BLEASE. I am practically through. I am glad to have the information.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The committee report states that the Vare-Beidleman combination spent $785,934. It is fair to say, however, that $105,464 of that amount was expended by a separate committee, operating particularly in the interest of Mr. Beidleman. But the evidence very clearly discloses that what helped one of these gentlemen pretty much helped the other. They were running together—in pairs.

Mr. BLEASE. That is what I understood.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator stated it had not been made known by the committee. It is all very plainly stated in this report.

Mr. BLEASE. I am glad the Senator gave me the information. That does not change my position at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not saying that it does.

Mr. BLEASE. The man who is going to appoint this man's successor spent more money to corrupt the voters of Pennsylvania than he did.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is not the statement I am controverting.

Mr. BLEASE. I know; but that is the statement of the figures there.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I did not want the Senator to let go into the RECORD the statement that the committee had not disclosed to the Senate the facts.

Mr. BLEASE. Oh, no. I offered a resolution here at the last session asking for the Pepper statement, but never got it. I did not say that the committee tried to withhold anything. I do not charge them with that.

So far as Mr. VARE's certificate is concerned, I do not know anything about Mr. Pinchot, but I was told by my daddy when I was a little boy that it was a mighty dirty bird that would befoul its own nest.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we have had some rather strange arguments advanced in the Senate in the consideration of these two cases, some Senators holding that if these Senators elect are once seated, it will require two-thirds of the Senate to get rid of them, others holding that the Senate can by a majority of the Members remove them from this Chamber. If it is true that it requires a two-thirds majority, those who voted to seat them temporarily are hiding behind a screen, because it would be perhaps hard to get a two-thirds majority to remove them, and if we should fail to get the two-thirds majority those who vote to seat them temporarily will, in effect and in fact, have voted to give them a seat permanently.

I think that the Senate ought to set a precedent for all the States of the Union that no person who comes seeking membership in this body will be admitted at all unless he comes with clean hands. If he buys his seat in the Senate as one would buy a seat on a stock exchange, it is the duty of honest men in this body to reject him. Why should we respect such a certificate in the outset, born in corruption, brought forth in iniquity, and presented here by those who place the stress and emphasis upon money rather than upon manhood and merit of the candidate in the various States of the Union?

I do not think that we are surrendering any State rights when we undertake to protect and preserve the good name, honor, and integrity of the Senate. I am a State rights Democrat. The States themselves agreed that this body should determine who should be admitted to membership here. The States themselves select a candidate and elect him, but they clothe this body with authority to say whether or not he should be accepted as a Member when he gets here. The Constitution makes it the duty of the Senate to determine that question. If we have found that the man whom they sent here is not a suitable person, is an unfit person to have a seat in this body, we reject him and the State straightway selects another. If the State selects one who is clean and honest and whose certificate is free from fraud and corruption, he will be accepted. There never has been any question about that.

Mr. President, this is the gravest occasion that has been presented to the Senate during my service of some 20 years in the Capitol. I recall when this body, for good reasons, rejected Clark, of Montana, a Democrat, and Lorimer, of Illinois, a Republican, who bought his seat in this body, and when Newberry, Republican, of Michigan, who spent about $200,000 in the purchase of his seat, was finally gotten rid of. But this is the first time in the history of this body, so far as I know, where two men seeking admission to the Senate were on trial at the same time for corrupting the ballot in their States and buying Senate seats on the auction block.

The Senator from Pennsylvania told us that one-tenth of the population of the whole country lives in the State of Pennsylvania. I remarked to some of my colleagues yesterday that they were corrupting a larger portion of the whole population than I had thought prior to that time. Ten per cent of the people of the whole country have been injuriously affected by that election. Illinois, another great State, stands shamed and humiliated because of the political corruptionist. There sleep the remains of the immortal Lincoln, who proclaimed it to the world that he stood for the doctrine which places the man above the dollar. That doctrine has been reversed in Illinois, and the dollar has been placed above the citizen. Out in Illinois they select a man for the Senate by the sheer use of money at the polls. And over in Pennsylvania $1,800,000 was spent by one group of candidates for State offices and one candidate for the United States Senate. Think of that, Senators!

It is our business as Senators to safeguard the interests of the Republic. If we fail to do that, we are unworthy to be in this body. Personal feelings and considerations do not enter into this matter with me.

I am very fond of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE]. I served with him in the House, and I also served there with Mr. SMITH. But personal likes and dislikes should not be considered in a case like this. Our duty to our country should determine our course. There are two groups of people in this country now and at this very hour they are arrayed on opposing sides in a great battle. One of those groups is fighting to keep the ballot clean, is fighting to keep the corruptionists away from the ballot box, which is the Ark of the Covenant in our civic affairs, fighting to keep the senatorial toga off the auction block. The other group is fighting to beat back the senatorial candidates of moderate means and to set aside the senatorial offices as the political preserves of men of great wealth. They want the dollar to become the main thing, the all-powerful thing in senatorial elections.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has indirectly laid down that doctrine here to-day. He said the time has come when it requires a great deal of money to be a candidate for office and that a man should not be criticized for spending vast sums to get his cause before the people. Why, Senators, that is one of the things we are worried about here to-day. If we are going to say that that doctrine is sound, then the rich man can open his barrel, as was done in Illinois and Pennsylvania, and go out and buy a seat in the Senate. If we permit a man to use all the money he pleases to send out vast amounts of literature, to hire men at the various polling places in the State, each candidate, if he had it, could spend a million dollars or more, and it would be said it was all right, according to the standard set up to-day by the Senator from Massachusetts. Let me analyze his position a moment.

Suppose a rich man who relies on his money to elect him enters the race for the United States Senate. A poor man of merit, capable, of high character, popular, a man known to be one of sound principles and a friend of constitutional government, likewise enters the race and is assailed by the rich man. He is attacked in paid advertising matter in a half dozen big dailies in the State. The poor candidate comes forward and says, "There is no truth in those charges. They are false." His friends say, "But you must answer his charges." "How am I going to answer them?" "Answer them in the newspapers, where he made them." When he goes to ask what it will cost, he is told that it will cost him $500 a page. He says, "I am a poor man and not able to pay it." Thus we can see in what sort of a fix the poor man would be if the rich man can spend all he pleases to spend in a senatorial election. His friends say to him, "You had better get out of the race. You are not able to go through such a campaign with this man because he has too much money."

So it is proposed to drive men and women of merit out of politics. It is proposed to put the stress and emphasis on money, and money is to become the dominating thing in the politics of the country. Do we want to see that done, Senators? Is it safe for the country to permit it to be done?

The time was when the people asked of a candidate, is he capable, is he honest, is he trustworthy? But now the corruptionists ask, How much money has he got? The boodlers who gather about the polling places want to know how much money he has. More and more people who do not think very much about these things are being encouraged to sell themselves like sheep in the market place to the man who wants to buy a seat in the Senate. Some people do not know why they want seats here. It is our duty to tell them. They want these seats because they have power here to enact laws which give to big favor-seeking corporations the advantages which they want over the people whom they wish to pillage and plunder. They want seats in this body because it enables them to get more completely control of the national Government. God knows they are making inroads upon it fast enough; ways other than buying seats in the Senate.

I heard somebody say yesterday, "I am so sorry for SMITH and VARE," But we are not trying these cases on our sympathies. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] told us yesterday about how beneficent and kind and fine Mr. Vare had been in various ways; that he had some of the Senators almost in tears over what a great outrage was about to be perpetrated on Mr. VARE, and his friend wore an expression of injured innocence. It reminded me of a story about a lawyer in my State, St. John, of Cullman, Ala. He went home one afternoon about dark and found that Mrs. St. John had the 6-year-old boy standing up in the corner delivering a lecture to him about some of his misconduct. St. John came in and said, "Mama, I wouldn't scold that boy. He is the best boy in town." The boy, looking very innocent, looked up at his father. St. John said, "He came over to my office to-day and got my mail and opened it for me." The boy was deeply touched; he commenced to pucker up his lips as if he were about to cry. St. John, continuing, said: "I heard him humming a religious tune this morning." The little fellow could not stand it any longer. He interrupted his father to say, "And I am going to be baptized soon." [Laughter.] One would think that these two gentlemen seeking admission to the Senate were ready to be translated and borne away on angel wings to their immortal homes. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] this morning stated that Pennsylvania was the only State that could confer immortality on the citizen, that if a man ever got on the Republican poll list in Pennsylvania he never died. It is said that all they want in Philadelphia is a name. On one occasion they asked a negro if anybody else lived in his house. He said, "No, sir; nobody but my dog Tige." "Tige who?" "Tige Johnson." They said, "Put him down and vote him." [Laughter.]

So, Mr. President, when election cases from these two great States, Illinois and Pennsylvania—two of the very greatest States in the Union—are here for consideration in this body at one and the same moment, is it not high time that Senators were waking up? Senators have a duty to perform. Our fathers achieved our liberty. It is up to us to preserve it. We can not preserve it by permitting anybody, be he Democrat or Republican, to corrupt the voter in his State, make barter of the ballot, and buy seats in the United States Senate.

There ought not to be any difference of opinion on this question in this body; there ought not to be any politics in a question like this. Each side should vie with the other to see which could go quickest to the rescue of American institutions at a time like this.

Senators, we are going to do one of two things about this matter: We are going to sustain the doctrine of clean and honest elections or we are going to yield and surrender to the forces of corruption in politics. That is the issue involved in the cases before us. On which side do you stand in this critical hour? That is the question that I put to every Senator in this body.

The able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] told us that $3,000,000 was spent in Pennsylvania and Illinois in the elections of 1926. Think of that, Senators! That amount of money would pay the salaries of two United States Senators for 150 years, and yet the "interests" in those States think enough of two seats in this body to go out and spend $3,000,000 in political battles in two States to obtain two seats in the Senate of the United States. They must think that they would be worth a lot to them in six years' time.

It is not the honor, then, that they are after; it is not the matter of trying to elect some friend. Senators, it is high time that this body was reconsecrating itself to the highest and best interests of our country. Special interests are anxious to get their agents into this body; they are anxious to get them into the other House of Congress. They are so anxious to do so that they have bought newspapers to poison public sentiment, and they help the cause of the corruptionist along. They have not stopped with that, but now they have invaded the sacred precincts of the ballot box itself and stand there with their bags of gold. They are putting prices on the heads of those who wield the ballot, the mightiest weapon known to a free man, a weapon with which this Government is to be preserved or by the corrupt use of which this Government is to perish. Senators, more governments have perished from corruption from within than have by armies from without. It is easy to get some men to fight for their country in time of war, but it is hard to arouse them to the importance and necessity of fighting in time of peace to preserve free institutions.

I say this with all kindness to Senators here who do not agree with me; but some of them seem so careless and indifferent about this very important question; they do not seem to realize the importance of the great fight that is before us. They do not seem to realize that we have got to win this fight or surrender to the corrupt money bunds of America. There can be no compromise with the forces of corruption. We have got to fight to the bitter end and rout these forces; expel them from the Capitol and thus destroy this corrupt power in the States or surrender to them and tell them to carry on their work of destruction until this Government shall totter and fall. That is the situation with which we are confronted.

The Washington Post, which is Ned McLean's paper, discusses this matter editorially. Think of Ned McLean, with his Fall and Doheny record, lecturing the Senate of the United States! He has a very short memory or a very thick hide. Senators will recall that he admitted that he had told falsehoods about furnishing Fall the money that he really got from Doheny to betray his trust and his country, to barter the oil reserves of the Nation. Ned was mixed up in that scandal very deeply and he came out stained and soiled all over. Now he undertakes to lecture the Senate, and says the Senate has disgraced itself by voting to protect itself and the country from the forces of political corruption in the States of Illinois and Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, do not the facts show us how determined the "interests" are to continue to buy seats in this body? They were not satisfied; it did not make much impression on them when the Senate got rid of Clark, of Montana; they were not taught anything, it seems, when Lorimer was put out of this Chamber; it seems that they derived no lesson from our action with regard to Newberry. They come now with twin evils—two States at a time. They are worse now than ever before. The State of Pennsylvania comes with a candidate whose certificate the governor of the State says was procured through fraud and corruption. They stole part of it, he said, and bought the other part. Still the editor of the Washington Post tells us that we have disgraced ourselves by voting to keep out of the Senate the man who comes here as the result of fearful conditions described by the governor of the State.

In Illinois Mr. Insull, the great hydroelectric power magnate, puts up money by the thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars for Mr. SMITH, who was chairman of the commission which regulated the charges for light and power in Chicago and throughout Illinois. Those charges were raised, we are told, and Mr. Insull got the benefit of the increased price, and therefore had more money to contribute to Mr. SMITH, who remained chairman of that commission rendering service to his benefactor and his benefactor helping his friend, whom he expected to be his agent or friendly instrumentality in the Senate of the United States.

Thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars were contributed in that way, and Mr. Insull, when called before a committee of this body, declined to tell what he knew. This arrogant and pompous representative of the money trust of America folded his arms and said, "I decline to answer." He defied this body—the constituted authority of the Nation—refused to tell the truth as he knew it, and we have not obtained it to this day; yet we secured enough admissions to know that they spent $800,000 or more to procure for themselves a seat in this Chamber.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said at the outset that when a man comes here he must come with clean hands. We rejected Mr. SMITH last winter. When Mr. McKinley died the Governor of Illinois, who himself had been indicted and was accused by people throughout his State of being an improper man to be in that office, appointed Mr. SMITH. They thought they would turn a trick on the Senate.

They said the Senate is bound to accept him now, because the contest over the election will not come up until after the 4th of March. They can not go into that until the term for which he is elected begins. So they said, "We will slip him down there and they will keep him, and after the 4th of March, if they try to put him out, the country will laugh at them and say, 'If he was good enough to serve under an appointment, he is good enough to serve under the certificate of election.'" The Senate, however, properly asked, in effect, "Are you the same SMITH who ran in the primary? You are the same man for whom they spent nearly a million dollars? You are the man against whom charges have been filed which a committee has investigated and has about recommended that you are not entitled to a seat? The same man. And now you come under the appointment of a governor, and you think you will get in? Well, you will not be admitted." I voted to stop him at the door then, and I have no apology to make for my vote. I voted to halt him at the door on yesterday, and I have no apology to make for that vote. As for me and my vote, so long as I am a Member of this body I am going to fight to the last the corruptionists of every State in the Union. I am not going to vote to seat a man for whose election barrels of money have been spent and who, if seated, will help to make laws for my State and the other States of the Union.

This is more than a State question. The other States are vitally interested. Senators from Illinois and Pennsylvania vote on laws for Arizona, Alabama, New York, New Hampshire, and all the other States of the Union. So the people in all those States are interested. We who sit in this body are the judges as to who shall come here and occupy seats, and when a citizen comes properly clothed and comes with clean hands nobody asks any questions. Even if he has an ordinary contest on his hands he is sworn in and takes his seat and the contest is then proceeded with. But, Mr. President, I submit that these are exceptional cases, extraordinary cases; and methods have been used to procure seats here that ought to be frowned on and condemned by this body as a whole. We ought to teach a lesson to the corruptionists of other States. They must be made to know that certificates of election to the Senate will not be accepted unless they are free from fraud and corruption. I will tell you one thing that has happened already as a result of the challenge of Mr. SMITH'S right to a seat here. I understand that Mr. Insull, out in Illinois, has said, "I am not going to give a dollar to anybody's senatorial campaign in the future." They said, "Why?" He said, "Well, it does not do any good. They will not seat him even if we put him over."

That is the lesson we are trying to teach them. That is the thought that we should get into their heads. That is the thing we ought to make plain to all of them. When they go around and say, "You give me money and I can win this race," the answer will be, "No; you will have to win on your merits. You will have to consult the people whose Government this is. If they want to vote for you, all right. I think you are a fair man, and I believe you would do justice by our interests, as you would by everybody else's interests. I do not ask for any special favors. I should be glad to see you elected, because I think you are a fair man and a capable man."

That is what we want, Mr. President. We do not want these men to go with their hats in their hands to these big moneyed interests and gather up shekels from them and go out to make their campaigns for election to the Senate. It is humiliating to the citizen; it is dangerous to the body politic, because when you carry on a campaign like that you induce the citizen to sell himself; and I want to tell you another thing: The man who will buy a seat in this body will sell it in more ways than one. There is no question about that. Whenever they buy a seat in this body they know that they are going to get value received, at least, and sometimes a hundredfold more, or they would not make the investment at the outset.

I hold no prejudice against capital. It is necessary. It is a valuable thing to have in our country. I wish it well in all of its legitimate endeavors; but I do not want capital to control the country. I do not want capital to become the dominating thing in my country. I want capital to stand on the level with every other interest and let them all say, "The only interest I have in the selection of a Senator is that I want one who is big enough and broad enough and honest enough and just enough to give me fair treatment. That is all I ask. I want a Senator who believes in sound principles, who is capable, and who will support and sustain to the best of his ability this great Government of ours."

But, Senators, they are getting away from that. They want to put all that in the background now; and they want to say, as they said in the Newberry case, "How much will it take to put it over?" They told them, and they put up the money; and John Newberry said he spent it, and his brother did not know it; and some Senators voted to keep Newberry in here because, they said, he did not know. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] pointed out this morning that Mr. SMITH of Illinois voted to unseat Mr. McLane, of Pennsylvania, because somebody without his knowledge spent $3,000 more than they thought they ought to have spent, and that he only spent $700 in all himself; and Mr. SMITH of Illinois voted to turn him out. Now, however, he comes up with about $800,000 piled up around him; and still they say we ought to bring these men in and put the purple robes on them, and sit them down on the front seats, and spread a feast, and let them enjoy themselves and be happy for a time before we execute or excuse them. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am in favor of operating on them before we go to all that trouble. They ought to have thought of all this before, as the judge said to the criminal who stood in front of him:

"Stand up! What have you to say why the sentence of the law should not be pronounced upon you"?

"Well, judge," he said, "life is a precious thing. I hate to give it up. I hate to leave my wife and children behind. I hate to die. If there is any way for you to get around it, Judge, I wish you would do it. It would please me more than I can tell you. You do not know how sorry I am for all that I have done."

"Yes; yes," the old judge said, as he stroked his whiskers. "You ought to have thought of all that before you killed that man, murdered him in cold blood and deprived his wife of her husband, and his children of their father, and left them alone in the world with nothing to subsist upon. You should have thought of all that when you were doing the thing that brings you where you are to-day."

I commend that story to the gentlemen whose seats are being relieved of them. They ought to have thought of that when they went out into the sacred precincts of the American ballot box and held a poor man up who was hard pressed to get money to pay his rent, and asked him to betray his country and disgrace himself and sell himself on the auction block, and he halted and hesitated for a time, and they said, "Here is $10. You are a poor man. Go ahead and vote this ticket"; and he walked up with a lump in his throat and a tear in his eye and sold himself at the altar place of his country; and the minions of mammon laughed as they dragged that citizen down into the political mire of those who betray their country for a price.

They who go to the ballot box and station their emissaries about it with their money, clinking their dollars and dimes, and inviting these people that they have oppressed in the common walks of life, where they have made it hard for them to live, and say, "You people have not got anything much. You are having a hard time. Why not make some money out of this? What do you care about it? Get in the game. Here is $10"; and some come up and accept it. The man who corrupts the voter is a public enemy. These corruptionists who care nothing for the temple of liberty in America, who care nothing for constitutional government in the United States. They will betray it, weaken it, and sell it to increase their riches. Greed and avarice unbridled, unchecked, is rampant around many of the polling places of this Republic, and the honest men in this body have it in their power to stop it, to put an end to it, to be done with it. We are either going to do that or we are going to accept the standards of the Newberrys and the Lorimers and the Clarks and the group back of the two gentlemen who stand here knocking at the door of the Senate to-day and permit the work of destruction to go on.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] in effect has laid down the doctrine that money becomes the paramount thing. You have got to advertise more, and keep on advertising. Then, according to his position, there should be no limit to the campaign fund that a candidate should spend. He laid down that doctrine. When he laid it down he said to the American people, "Those who have money in abundance can get these places. Those who can not advertise can not get them. Only the rich can run for these places. Only the rich can be elected to the Senate. Only men of great wealth can reach the position of United States Senator."

They want to make money the dominating thing in American politics.

Money, money, money! Remember Thomas Moore's poem on corruption and intolerance:

> Like Jove of old
> They have turned their thunder into showers of gold,
> Whose silent courtship wins securer joys,
> Taints by degrees, and ruins without noise.

That is what they have done in Illinois and Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, in other days these enemies of clean and honest government moved around with dark lanterns, but they have become very bold in recent years. They have thrown aside their dark lanterns and now they dare to come boldly to the Capital of the Nation and employ learned lawyers to write their briefs and make their arguments and send them free to Senators in book form to influence them to sanction the sale of seats in the Senate. No longer do they proceed by dark-lantern methods. They are bold and defiant now. They write their checks. Insull gives his check for $25,000, $50,000, $75,000, and so on, into the hundreds of thousands, and the same thing goes on with these men in Pennsylvania; and when you catch them in the act they say, "Why, yes; we spent this money. What of it?" They throw out their chests and swell up in their imaginary importance when they should hang their heads and hide their faces.

Senators, are we who speak for the people of the various States going to permit this sort of thing to continue? Are we going to encourage or condone those who have been guilty of procuring votes in senatorial elections by the corrupt use of money?

The Senator from Massachusetts admitted to us that the people want SMITH and VARE kept out of the Senate. He said: "I am sorry for the Senators who have to run next year if they vote against this resolution." That is what he said. He was admitting that the people wanted them stopped at the door. We are a Government of the people, and he was admitting that we were carrying out the wishes of the people. Then we are doing what the Constitution gives us the right to do and authorizes us to do—to say who shall come in here and occupy seats and make laws for the people of every State in the Union. These two cases are not on the same footing with the ordinary one where a Senator presents himself for admission and objection is had because of some irregularity in his credentials, and so forth. The fraud and corruption in the primary election of both of these gentlemen were so pronounced and offensive that the Senate appointed a committee of Senators to investigate and report the facts to the Senate, and the committee did so. The facts substantially as reported by the Senate committee to the Senate are not denied, and in the face of those undisputed facts the Senate is justified in refusing them admission.

We are here to protect the honor and integrity of this body, to safeguard the rights and interests of the American people, and to keep this place clean and free from the corruptionist in politics. These are the things that should concern us to-day.

The Senator from Connecticut said the Senate could remove the President, could remove Supreme Court judges, could remove the Vice President, and that is true, and yet they come in here and scold the Senate for refusing to admit to membership men whose credentials are badly tainted with fraud and corruption. The Senate, that can impeach the President of the United States, ought certainly to keep the Senate clean and trustworthy. Candidates for the Senate from all political parties must be made to understand that the candidate for the Senate who corrupts the voter and obtains election through fraud and corruption, as these men did, will not be admitted to membership here. But some of the Senators on the other side tell us that we are denying a State representation in the Senate. We are not doing anything of the kind. We are trying the case of men seeking admission to the Senate, and as soon as we are through with them the Governors of Illinois and Pennsylvania will have the opportunity to appoint another Senator from each of those States, and if the governor appoints one who can come with clean certificate there will be no objection to him at the bar of the Senate.

But what has happened with Illinois? The governor of that State undertook to force Mr. SMITH down the throat of the Senate, and the Senate refused to let him do it. The governor said, "If you do not take this man, I will not send you another"; so the Governor of Illinois, not the Senate, deprived his State of representation in this body during that brief time.

When this body made known its reasons for refusing the credentials of Mr. SMITH the governor should have said, "They have exercised their constitutional right; there is nothing for me to do but to select another," and he should have done so. I do not think anybody will take the position that the Senate should be coerced by the governor of that State. The Senate has its own rights under the Constitution, and the States have their rights. The State selects the candidate, as I said before, but it owes it to the people of the State and owes it to the Nation to select one with clean hands, not one whose position has been bought for him at the polling places of the State. We must make that plain to them all, and the sooner we do it the better.

Take the State of Pennsylvania again, a State with 67 counties, a rock-ribbed Republican State. My recollection is that Roosevelt carried it by 500,000 majority in 1904. It is known as a rock-ribbed Republican State. Yet William B. Wilson, a Democrat and a poor man, carried 55 counties of the 67 counties, and reached Philadelphia with a clear majority of 60,000 votes. The only counties that he lost were those counties where they had the padded poll lists and where the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] says they confer immortality on the citizen. Once on the poll list, they live on and on, for all voting purposes. They continue to vote them after they are dead. Republicans and Democrats alike repudiated the Vare machine and voted for Wilson, a poor but an honest man. It is time this body was teaching a lesson to those who have made money the paramount thing in the politics of our country.

The Senator from Massachusetts said:

> When I was a young man I used to hear about corrupting voters, but we do not hear of that any more.

Mr. President, it has become so common under Republican rule in some of the States that it is no longer interesting table talk. Among some Republicans they accept it as a matter of course. Money to control elections! The Senator says he does not hear of it much now. Oh, Mr. President, there is plenty of it in these two cases. There are more ways of corrupting voters than one. One way is to offer them so much money to vote the ticket; and then there is another way, hiring them with liberal pay to become watchers, or to take part in other ways in the campaign, to draw them into their political net and tie them hard and fast. The man who does not have plenty of money can not employ high-priced watchers like they have in Pennsylvania. The man who does not have a lot of money can not give employment to political grafters. A poor man who does not believe in appealing to the power of the purse, but who appeals to the judgment and conscience of the voters, must stand by and see voters influenced and controlled by money directly and indirectly paid for votes.

Mr. President, that brings me back to the proposition that we have got to surrender to these miserable forces or whip them and rout them completely. For instance, take a newspaper in my State, the Birmingham News, which has been attacking me in edtorials and otherwise, misrepresenting and slandering me since I opposed the Mexican war program of the Roman Catholic hierarchy. I wanted to print a statement in reply to some of their attacks, and the Birmingham News wired me that it would cost me $4 an inch. Think of that—$4 an inch to state the truth regarding their slanderous and villainous attacks upon me.

What is a poor man going to do with an unprincipled bunch like that, unless he is already in public life, as I am, and the people of his State know him and understand him and support him, as they do me. I went over my State, and every place I spoke the audience, by a vote of 98 per cent of those present, passed a resolution condemning and repudiating that paper and indorsing me. In the city of Birmingham, where the Birmingham News is published, I addressed an audience of 7,000 people in the city auditorium, and there the whole audience, by a rising vote, passed that resolution. Carry your fight to the people in person. That is the thing to do. You can buy some newspapers now, just as you can buy a pig at the butcher's shop, and you can buy the editorial pages of some of them now just as you can buy space for advertising purposes. This is another evil that must be checked.

Three-fourths of the press of the country is owned or subsidized by selfish and sordid interests. These interests are getting a stranglehold on the Associated Press's throat right here at the Capitol. Mussolini, the dangerous Italian tyrant, has an agent right here at the Capital in touch with the Associated Press who looks out for his interests, and they are giving Mussolini more favorable publicity in the press of the United States, together with the Fascist societies, than they are the whole membership of the United States Senate.

The sinister interests are letting their money talk in many ways. It is getting hold of these instrumentalities in our Nation. I repeat, in conclusion, that it has invaded the ballot box and corrupted the voter. Many of the newpapers suppress the truth. They will not let it reach the country through their columns. They are making money the all-powerful thing, so that they can lay the candidacy of the rich man before the people and keep that of the poor man away from the people.

Now they march boldly and brazenly upon the ballot box itself, corrupting the citizen, buying votes, and buying seats in the Senate. This thing must be destroyed or it will destroy the free institutions that we love. Senators, the time will come when you will fight in vain if you do not fight now to stop at this door those who have, by corrupting the citizen, committed a crime against the country. The man who comes to this body with an election certificate bought by the avaricious money bunds of America is not entitled to be sworn in. Let him be heard, as the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has provided; let him go before the committee again, let him come in and have the privilege of the floor to make his statement and defend his title. But never let him have the satisfaction of saying that he is a United States Senator, that he has been sworn in and clothed with the authority, the majesty, and the power of a Senator of the United States. Deny him that as a part of the punishment for his crime against his country. Make that a part of the penalty for all those who deliberately corrupt the ballot and poison the Nation at its source. Halt him at the door of this Chamber. Tell him that a certificate bought in the market of corrupted ballots will not admit him here. Repudiate his action and deny him admission. Senators, let us as patriotic Americans stand as one on this vital question and protect and preserve the institutions intrusted to our care. Let the citizen approached by one of these unprincipled corruptionists with the proposition to buy his vote be encouraged to scorn and spurn him, and report him to the lawful authorities, and let us have a law under which such a person can be prosecuted and severely punished. Let us throw every safeguard possible around the voter for in his hands and in her hands are lodged the power to preserve or destroy the Government of the United States.

When you corrupt the voters of a single State you are weakening and impairing the Federal Government of all the States; and the Senator who seeks to discourage and prevent the corruption of voters in a senatorial election in any of the States is rendering valuable service to the people of all the States. And the only way the Senator can do that without interfering with the rights and prerogatives of the State is to refuse to accept as a Member of this body the candidate who comes here with a title tainted with corruption, with a certificate bought at the ballot box. A title to land obtained through fraud and corruption is not valid and the courts will declare it null and void. You can prevent the party claiming title under the fraudulent transaction from taking possession of the land for even a minute. Then how much more important it is that this Senate, the greatest law-making body in the world, shall declare the title to seats in this body that were obtained through fraud and corruption are of no effect and null and void.

RECESS

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, December 9, 1927, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, December 8, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, Thou art divinely good again to gladden our hearts and to cheer our lives. Thou hast continued to bestow upon us Thy sacred gifts. Through the serene of light and the calm of dark we have been kept by Thy soothing, restful Providence. We thank Thee. Our Republic, O God, with all its splendid traditions, with all its marvelous progress, do Thou remember. By the inspiration of high idealism and Christian aspiration may it live on and on to disappoint our foes and to surprise our friends. May every section be guarded against any enemy that may be stalking to mar or disturb our national unity. May the culture of peace, good will, and brotherhood keep our Nation erect and calm for the blessing of all who dwell within our borders. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mr. CASEY, of the twelfth Pennsylvania district, and Mr. MANLOVE, of the fifteenth Missouri district, appeared at the bar of the House and were sworn in by the Speaker.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE ANDERSON H. WALTERS

Mr. LEECH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEECH. Mr. Speaker, it is with real sorrow that I announce to the House the death last night of Hon. Anderson H. Walters, of Johnstown, Pa. Mr. Walters, who was my immediate predecessor, honored the State of Pennsylvania as Representative at Large in the Sixty-third, Sixty-sixth, and Sixty-seventh Congresses, and the twentieth district of his State in the Sixty-ninth Congress. During the past two years my friend had suffered from an incurable disease, pernicious anemia, which caused his brother's death some years ago, but in the face of the inevitable he consistently displayed the quiet courage and cheerfulness that so clearly portrayed his real character. He was of unassuming personality, but his strength of character was outstanding to those who knew him at home, as I now know they knew him here. Pennsylvania and his district are poorer by reason of the untimely death of Mr. Walters.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

UNVEILING OF THE STATUE OF ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. At 3 o'clock this afternoon the statue of Hon. Alexander Hamilton Stephens will be unveiled in Statuary Hall. The Governor of Georgia and about a thousand Georgians are here to participate in the ceremonies. Vice President Dawes, on behalf of the Nation, will accept the statue that was prepared by Mr. Borglum.

Mr. Stephens was one of Georgia's most distinguished patriots, orators, statesmen, and historians. He served in this House for 26 years. A part of that service was rendered when Statuary Hall was the Hall of the House of Representatives. He was one of the Members who moved from that Hall to this one, and his statue will reside permanently in the place where he served with great ability his State and Nation as a Member of the House of Representatives.

The governor has asked me to invite the Members of the House to attend these ceremonies, and in conclusion I will read the formal invitation to the House. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 6, 1927.

To the Members of the United States Congress now in session:

GENTLEMEN: On Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock in National Statuary Hall the statue of Alexander Hamilton Stephens, distinguished Georgian, gifted statesman, author, and patriot, and for 26 years a Member of your honorable body, is to be unveiled.

On behalf of his honor, the governor, I wish to extend a cordial invitation to you to be present for the exercises on this eventful occasion.

Sincerely,

GARNETT W. QUILLIAN, M. D.,
Chairman Governor's Statuary Committee.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to say a word on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, when Abraham Lincoln was a Member of this House he sat for two years in a seat adjoining Alexander H. Stephens and the result was a warm and close friendship between them.

At one time he wrote to his partner Herndon back in Springfield and said:

I have to-day listened to the best speech of an hour's duration that I ever heard, delivered by Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, a little wizened-up man, but my old eyes are still filled with tears, and if his speech is printed I assure you my constituents shall have many copies.

If you will pardon me for a personal reference, I want to say that Lincoln's seat was later taken by my own father, who also sat in a seat adjoining Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, on December 7 Mr. Arthur H. Sapp, president of the Rotary International, delivered an address before the Washington Rotary Club at the New Willard Hotel, in the presence of 32 diplomats, representing the principal nations of the world. I think his address is one of considerable importance and would be of interest to the Members. I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert the same in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, whose speech is it?

Mr. WOLVERTON. It is a speech by Mr. Arthur H. Sapp, president of the Rotary International, and it deals with the International Rotary in the form of universal peace among the nations of the world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, in order to ask from the powers that be on both sides of the House what their policy is going to be with reference to printing extraneous matter in the RECORD. I have been the goat just about as long as I want to be in trying to protect the RECORD from speeches, resolutions, editorials, and other matter which has nothing to do with the business of Congress; but if the leadership of the House is willing to have this go on as it has in the past and continue the abuse as it has been in the past, I do not know that any one humble Member of the House has any right to butt in.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. This is a matter in which every Member of this House is equally interested and as to which each Member has equal power. It is the duty of each Member, just as much as it is the duty of the majority or the minority leader, to protect the RECORD. I do not think that the entire membership of this House on both sides should attempt to unload upon the shoulders of the leaders of the respective sides the duty of protecting the RECORD. I repeat, it is the duty of every individual Member on this floor to accept the responsibility, and if any one Member sees any reason why a particular thing should not be extended in the RECORD, then he should say so, and he should not try to unload his responsibility upon the leadership or upon anyone else.

Mr. UNDERHILL. What I asked was what the policy of the leadership is to be?

Mr. BUTLER. And how are we going to know what the matter is until we have an opportunity to read it? We would simply have to guess at it.

Mr. TILSON. The policy is made by the individual Members of the House, because it is a matter requiring unanimous consent. The leadership might establish some policy in their own minds, only to have it upset by some one Member. It is a matter in which every Member of this House is equally interested, and as to which he is equally charged with responsibility.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, until some policy has been determined upon, I shall object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is too late with his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in a situation like this, where it is impossible for the Chair to see all gentlemen who rise to object, that the gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to recognition to object. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

FLOOD CONTROL

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Flood Control:

To the Congress of the United States:

There is submitted herewith a letter from the Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, transmitting with favorable recommendation the report of Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, containing the plan of the Army Engineers for flood control of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley.

In my message to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the first session of the Seventieth Congress, the flood-control problem of the lower Mississippi and the urgent necessity for its solution were outlined. The general duties and responsibilities of the Federal Government in connection therewith were therein discussed.

The total cost of the recommended project is $296,400,000, distributed over a period of 10 years. This large sum is manifestly justified by the necessities of the situation and the benefits that will result. In determining the distribution of the costs there must be considered not only the people of the valley itself, who receive the major portion of the benefits, but also the great mass of taxpayers who suffer less directly from Mississippi River floods and upon whom most of the burden of Federal taxation falls. It is axiomatic that States and other local authorities should supply all land and assume all pecuniary responsibility for damages that may result from the execution of the project. It would be revolutionary for the Federal Government to establish the precedent of buying part of the land upon which to build protective works to increase the value of the remainder. Similarly it would be very unwise for the United States in generously helping a section of the country to render itself liable for consequential damages. The Federal Treasury should bear the portion of the cost of engineering structures for flood control that is justified by the national aspects of the problem and the national benefits. It may even bear 80 per cent of such costs, but substantial local cooperation is essential to avoid waste. The portion this would leave to be borne locally for flood-control structures represents an expenditure of about $3, or 30 cents per year for 10 years for each acre in the alluvial valley to be protected every year from Mississippi River floods. The value per acre, including railroads, towns, cities, and other improvements, is estimated at something over $200. It would seem that the States should share with the Federal Government the burden of assisting the levee districts and individual property owners, especially in view of the fact that the States benefit directly by the increased taxes from land made more valuable by reason of its protection.

The plan transmitted herewith is comprehensive and appeals to me as being adequate in its engineering. I concur in general in the conclusions and recommendations reached in the report, and suggest that appropriate legislation be enacted putting them into effect.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1927.

CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICT

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

To the Congress of the United States:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provisions, viz:

> The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs collection districts and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor.

Pursuant to the requirements of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state the following changes in the organization of the Customs Service have been made by Executive order since the last report.

By Executive order dated December 8, 1926, Holeb and Jackman were consolidated into one customs port of entry to be known as Holeb-Jackman and to comprise all of the territory at present included in said ports, in customs collection district No. 1 (Maine and New Hampshire), with headquarters at Portland, Me., effective December 15, 1926.

By Executive order dated January 27, 1927, the ports of Ellsworth, Bar Harbor, and South West Harbor, in customs collection district No. 1 (Maine and New Hampshire), were abolished and a new port of entry created to be known as Bar Harbor, in the said customs collection district, with headquarters at Portland, Me., and comprising Mount Desert Island, the city of Ellsworth, and the townships of Hancock, Sullivan, Sorrento, Gouldsboro, and Winter Harbor, effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated February 5, 1927, the ports of Kenosha and Kewaunee in customs collection district No. 37 (Wisconsin), with headquarters at Milwaukee, Wis., were discontinued as ports of entry, effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated February 25, 1927, Akron, Ohio, was created a port of entry in customs collection district No. 41 (Ohio), with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated August 19, 1927, Coos County, N. H., at that time a part of customs collection district No. 1 (Maine and New Hampshire), with headquarters at Portland, Me., was made a part of customs collection district No. 2 (Vermont), with headquarters at St. Albans, Vt., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated September 22, 1927, Lancaster, Minn., was created a port of entry in customs collection district No. 34 (Dakota), with headquarters at Pembina, N. Dak., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated September 30, 1927, Alpena, Charlevoix, Detour, Escanaba, Houghton, Mackinaw, Manistee, Marine City, Marquette, Muskegon, St. Clair, and St. Joseph were abolished as ports of entry in customs collection district No. 38 (Michigan), with headquarters at Detroit, Mich., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

By Executive order dated October 8, 1927, Oklahoma City, Okla., was created a port of entry in customs collection district No. 45 (St. Louis), with headquarters at St. Louis, Mo., effective 30 days from the date of the order.

All of the above changes were dictated by consideration of economy and efficiency in the administration of customs and other statutes, with the enforcement of which the customs service is charged, as well as the necessities and convenience of commerce generally.

AERONAUTICS

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committees on Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, and Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, establishing the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, I submit herewith the thirteenth annual report of the committee for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927.

Attention is invited to the remarks of the committee on the death of its late chairman, Dr. Charles D. Wolcott, on whose advice the committee was established by the Congress in 1915. At a time when there was but little appreciation of the value of aeronautics and but slight conception of its problems, Doctor Walcott had the vision to see the need for organized scientific research on the fundamental problems of flight. The establishment of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the development of its usefulness in the formulation of policies, and the results of its labors in the field of research are a tribute to the leadership of Doctor Walcott and stamp him as a great constructive force in the upbuilding of American aeronautics.

The technical improvement in the performance and efficiency of aircraft for all purposes, the policy of the Government in the regulation and encouragement of aviation, and the great impetus given to aeronautical development during the past year by the transoceanic flights of Lindbergh and others have combined to cause a broader recognition of the practicability of aircraft as a means of transportation that I believe is destined to play an ever-increasing part in the advance of civilization.

The attention of the Congress is invited to Part V of the committee's report, presenting a summary of the present state of aeronautical development. It is gratifying to note the committee's opinion that aeronautical progress in the United States during the past year has surpassed the hopes of a year ago, and that the present governmental policy is primarily responsible. I concur in the committee's judgment that further substantial progress in aeronautics is dependent largely upon the continuous prosecution of scientific research.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5800), making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the first deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5800, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF JUDGES

For the additional amounts required from January 1 to June 30, 1927, inclusive, on account of the increased compensation granted by the act entitled "An act to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States," approved December 13, 1926, under the following appropriation accounts, respectively.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we were all very much interested, entertained, and amused yesterday while listening to the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts on the subject of our diplomacy. If it were not for the fact that some false impression might be had, I would not here offer anything in refutation of what was then said. But that there may be no false impression with refernce to the facts concerning the thing about which Mr. GALLIVAN so humorously spoke, I desire to correct the statement that he made concerning the treatment of the mayor of New York City while visiting in Europe. Mr. GALLIVAN said:

Recently the mayor of the greatest city of America visited Europe and was honorably received on his tour everywhere by all except the diplomatic representatives of his own country.

Then he proceeds to tell of the indignities to which he was subject in the city of Paris at the request and by reason of the suggestion of a chargé d'affaires, Mr. Sheldon Whitehouse, at that time. The fact of the business is that Mr. Walker was well received wherever he went throughout Europe, and that reception was augmented and contributed to by Mr. Sheldon Whitehouse, who gave him a reception and a dinner, to which were invited prominent men of France and a number of prominent men of the United States then in Paris, so that if he appreciated the entertainments given him and in honor of his occupying the office of mayor of the greatest city of the United States, I do not think it well becomes Mr. Walker to come back here and criticize or for anyone to criticize in this House any treatment to which he might have been subject without knowing the facts. When Mr. Carr, Assistant Secretary of State, appeared before the subcommittee having this bill in charge, the gentleman from Massachusetts asked whether there was any portion of the fund appropriated to the Department of State in reference to our foreign relations that was used in the hire of private detectives to exercise espionage over distinguished citizens while abroad. Mr. Carr very promptly and firmly denied there was anything of that character and agreed with the chairman of this committee [Mr. MADDEN], who said that if such were the case that such an expenditure would be without the pale of the law and whoever did such a thing would be subject to just criticism. Notwithstanding that fact, the gentleman from Massachusetts comes here and criticizes the Department of State because, forsooth, he alleges—and no doubt he received his information from what he deemed a reliable authority—that this character of surveillance was exercised over the gentleman from New York.

At the meeting of the Appropriations Committee on November 30 Congressman GALLIVAN stated that Mr. Sheldon Whitehouse had hired detectives to shadow Mayor Walker during his visit to Paris. Mr. Carr denied that any Government funds had been used for this purpose and said that he believed the assertion that Whitehouse had hired any detectives was untrue. On the chance that the matter might come up in Congress, the department telegraphed the embassy for information. Whitehouse stated that the assertion was entirely without foundation, and that when the story appeared in the Paris Herald on October 4 he had told several correspondents that it was absurd. The department then asked him whether it might not be possible that protection was given by the French police to Mayor Walker as a distinguished visitor. The French police stated that this was the case and that, on the arrival of the Legion, they had added two or three other plain clothes men to look after Mayor Walker, because they were very anxious to prevent any possible disagreeable incidents at that time. Other distinguished Americans in Paris at the time were given the same protection, the embassy was well guarded, and the efforts made by the French police to prevent trouble were completely successful.

What was done with reference to Mayor Walker was done entirely by the prefect of police of the city of Paris. The same thing was done in reference to Assistant Secretary of State Carr while he was visiting abroad. He was in Paris about that time, and because of the excitement prevailing throughout continental Europe in consequence of the approaching execution of Sacco and Vanzetti, the prefect of police in the city of Paris and the other great metropolitan cities of Europe were more than anxious to see that there were no incidents to occur that would bring criticism upon their country because of any mistreatment of an American citizen. Now the same character of surveillance was given to Mr. Carr that was given to Mr. Walker.

Mr. Carr later submitted the following statement, obtained from Mr. Sheldon Whitehouse, chargé d'affaires of the United States in Paris, in regard to the report that private detectives had been employed to shadow a distinguished American visiting Paris:

The prefect of police stated that the distinguished American in question was followed by two plain-clothes men from the time of his arrival in Paris. This is what is usually done by the police in the case of distinguished visitors. In this instance two or three more plain-clothes men were added later as an additional precaution. It is not the practice of the prefect to inform the distinguished visitor of the nature of the precautions which it is deemed proper to take on his behalf since experience has shown that visitors often object to the precautions, either as in their opinion unnecessary or because they do not desire to inconvenience the local authorities to the extent of providing special protection. The embassy was not concerned with the employment of the men in question.

Mr. Carr further testified that there are no secret detectives in the State Department. They have some investigators, and they are on their regular roll, their names can be had by anyone who requests them, but they are not employed in any private detective work or personal surveillance. And in this case there is no truth in fact with reference to the charge that has been made against the State Department that it had private detectives following Mayor Walker throughout Europe. It is not only an aspersion upon the Department of State, but it is an aspersion upon the United States itself.

I regret exceedingly that such information should be given currency in this Chamber. I regret exceedingly that any man occupying the high position that is occupied by Mayor Walker should think, or that any of his friends should feel, that he has been discriminated against.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a correction?

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I just wish to correct the impression the gentleman is giving. So far as I know, Mayor Walker never made such a charge. Those charges have been made by newspapers and others, but not by the mayor of our city.

Mr. WOOD. I am pleased to hear this from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman point out in my speech where I used one single word indicating the name of Mayor Walker?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts means to try to mislead the members of this committee with reference to the position that he now occupies. His language is that "recently the mayor of the greatest city in America"——

Mr. GALLIVAN. Some people thought I referred to the mayor of Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD. No; there is no one who had any such idea. There is no one who even thought that the gentleman referred to the great city of Boston. The State Department knew to whom he had reference because of the fact of the publications in the newspapers that have already been alluded to. There is no mistake about the identity of the mayor, and the gentleman will not deny that or can not deny that in truth.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And there is no mistake about the greatest city of America, either?

Mr. WOOD. No. We all agree on that proposition.

I thought that in justice to the State Department and to this House and to the country the facts in the premises should be given to you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes, out of order, to reply to the gentleman; or three minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought the gentleman ought to be allowed to take three minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Make it five minutes, out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do not know just what amendment my eminent friend from Indiana offered, but I am opposed to it anyway. [Laughter.] But, of course, he has not told the House at all what happened in our committee. We are not supposed to tell the House what happens in an executive session, and if he will find one word in the printed record of that session where Mayor Walker's name was mentioned I will resign here and now.

I made no attack on the State Department, and when I referred to "the mayor of the greatest city of America," several members of the Illinois delegation, thinking I was referring to the city of Chicago, asked me, "What happened to Bill Thompson over there?" [Laughter.] I said, "You had better ask my friend, MARTIN MADDEN; I do not know."

Of course, I made no attack upon the department, even for spending money for private detectives. As a member of the subcommittee, I asked Mr. Carr if any of the money for contingent expenses was provided to hire private detectives to shadow distinguished American officials, and Mr. Carr said, "Not to my knowledge," and, having the highest regard for Mr. Carr, I accepted his word for it.

I know this much, that when it appeared in the American press and in the press of countries overseas that the gentleman whose name has been mentioned by my good friend from Indiana had been shadowed, the chargé d'affaires at Paris never denied it then, and no denial to my knowledge has ever appeared until his statement was filed with the committee after we made up this bill. Therefore I do not want the House to get the wrong impression. As a member of the subcommittee I felt that it was my province to ask questions. That is my privilege as a member of this important subcommittee.

Now, with all due regard to the statement made by my good friend from Indiana, who has evidently been in close conference since yesterday with officials of the State Department, I desire to say to you here and now that I could repeat with much more emphasis than I placed on the whole story yesterday and with a little more detail, everything that I told to the House in the course of my remarks. Why? Because Members of this House have come to me—Members from both sides of the aisle, mostly on the Republican side—and they have told me that they themselves received the same kind of treatment I described when they visited the embassies abroad. I have never been abroad. These good men from the Republican side, I repeat, congratulated me and applauded me and said, "You have told the truth, and I am glad somebody has had the courage to stand up in Congress and let the country know just what those fellows are doing over there if one does not approach the embassies with the right sort of credentials." I have no apologies to offer for what I said yesterday, and I do not take back one single word of that speech. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $241,854.92, which shall be credited, respectively, to the appropriation accounts above enumerated.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wanted to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to his pleasure when we should return to a certain controverted item.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman has an amendment which he wants to offer which may or may not be controverted. Of course, we will not foreclose his rights. But I may say we have another item which may cause some discussion, and when we reach that I will ask that these other controverted items also be taken up.

Mr. McKEOWN. Very well.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MADDEN. I object. We must not waste time in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. All right. "What is sauce for the goose will be sauce for the gander."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of United States district judges, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year 1928, $51,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. This $51,000 is in addition to the sums of $60,000 and $90,000, found on pages 6 and 7 of the bill, providing funds for prosecuting the defendants involved in the oil leases.

Mr. MADDEN. This is for the salaries of judges, while the other was for the employment of counsel.

Mr. BLANTON. But the judges sit on the benches?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And try the cases.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows what it is for.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to discuss those items together, and that is the reason I mentioned the other ones. I hope the chairman of this committee and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee will look into the manner of conducting such cases and prosecutions here in the District of Columbia. No case wherein the rights and the interests of this Government are so vitally concerned ought ever to be tried in Washington, and if the gentleman from Illinois and the Judiciary Committee will look into the manner of conducting such cases here and the manner of the selection of the juries to try them and the personnel of the jury panels from which a jury must be selected they will provide means to force such cases to be tried in some other jurisdiction than that of Washington.

In my State in every case of felony, important and unimportant, the jury must be kept together in a State court, in charge of an officer of the court, and that is the rule that prevails, I dare say, in every State in this Union, but here in Washington, concerning a case wherein important individuals, if you please, rich and influential citizens, if you please, coupled with a former important official of this Government, when their jury was selected the court permitted them to separate, go to their homes each night, and go wherever they pleased. Then we had the charge made here in Washington that a bunch of Burns detectives from New York was here shadowing the personnel of that jury for means of approach. It is a disgrace to the judiciary of this Nation for such an occurrence to take place, for the ensuing mistrial cost thousands of dollars. I hope the gentleman from Illinois, as the head of the Appropriations Committee, and I hope the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, will look into this question, and I hope they will take steps to provide a different jurisdiction in which to try such important cases which concern so vitally the interests of the people of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARSHALS, DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, CLERKS, AND OTHER EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals: For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year 1924, $3,841.56.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that this is a deficiency bill, but I do want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the salaries paid deputy marshals in large cities. The salaries are out of all proportion to the important duties they must perform, especially at this time when added duties have been placed upon them. We have men in New York City, deputy marshals, paid as low as $1,400 and $1,500; and, Mr. Chairman, a man can not live in New York City on that salary. These men are intrusted with the custody of prisoners, with the transportation of prisoners, with the service of injunction papers, with duties in connection with padlock cases. The deputies in New York and other large cities are so underpaid that it is simply a disgraceful condition. I hope something will be done. It is no comfort to these men to tell them that the classification commission is studying their complaint in order that something may be done.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not put bread on the table?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. No; and it does not pay the rent. Some of these men can not afford to buy decent clothes to wear; so I hope, Mr. Chairman, you will grant an opportunity, at the proper time, to present all of the facts to your committee. Regardless of what may be in the Budget recommendations, I am going to ask the committee for a hearing when it takes up the Department of Justice appropriation bill. A comparison of the duties of these deputy marshals with a patrolman in the city will show that the United States deputies have in many instances a great deal more responsibilities, longer hours, and harder work. Their pay does not even commence to compare with that of a patrolman in New York City. Many of the Members who talk so emphatically on forcing obedience to the law will stand here and vote against amendments seeking to increase the pay of these men. There are many temptations that these deputies are subjected to and if good, loyal, efficient service is expected the least the Government can do is to pay them a living salary so that these men can live decently and support their families properly.

You can not compare salaries and living conditions in small communities with those in New York and the large cities. In a small place a man may go home for his lunch, rents are low, he has no car fares to pay, and it is simply absurd to try and compare the duties of these deputies in the southern and eastern judicial districts of New York with the duties of a single deputy in a place where Federal court may be held but a few weeks out of the year. Why, gentlemen, the Government treats the prisoners that these deputies take to Atlanta better than they do the deputy marshals.

Mr. Chairman, when the appropriation bill comes up, both in committee and on the floor, I am going to ask your cooperation to increase their salaries and to put them on a proper basis with a living wage.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States penitentiary, McNeil Island, Wash.: For the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash., including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year 1928, including not to exceed $12,000 for salaries of officers and employees, $12,900.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line. At this time, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I would like to call attention to the condition of the Federal jails throughout the United States. They are woefully overcrowded, crowded beyond capacity, and now that many of the States and counties have served notice on the Federal Government that they will no longer receive Federal prisoners after February 1, 1928, some action should be taken. So I take this occasion to call the attention of the House to the fact that it is of the utmost importance and of vital necessity that the House should look into this matter of penal institutions under Federal control.

I might say that I have introduced a resolution at the request of many people interested in the care and housing of Federal prisoners providing that a commission be appointed by the House to go into the entire matter. In 40 years nothing has been done toward investigating conditions in Federal prisons. If you go to the Department of Justice, you are not even able to get a list of the number of prisoners confined in Federal prisons. There are over 900 jails and penitentiaries in the United States which to-day are housing Federal prisoners. The only way you can find out the number and the names of the occupants is to go over the expense accounts of the various United States marshals. In order to get exact information on this subject it has cost approximately $40,000, which has been spent by a welfare institution in the city of New York. Therefore it shows you the importance of the House taking up this matter in order that something may be done.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman include in his proposition to investigate the unfortunate conditions of the prisons of our country an investigation of the use of narcotic drugs, especially as revealed by Colonel Forbes's statement in the last few days in the prison at Atlanta and in other Federal prisons of the country?

Mr. BOYLAN. I will be very glad to accept the proposed amendment of the distinguished medical gentleman from New York and incorporate that in the resolution.

I would like to say that one very flagrant case was brought to my attention where in a penitentiary or jail in Florida a woman, a Federal witness, was detained in one of these jails for nearly two years without proper facilities for her care during that period. There are other cases throughout the United States where the treatment of Federal prisoners and the payment for their maintenance is on a most ridiculous scale.

In some of the States the Federal Government is paying 30 cents a day for the maintenance of prisoners, and it costs the particular county maybe a dollar a day to maintain them. In other cases they are paying 60 or 70 cents a day when it costs the county $2 a day to take care of them.

We want to get away from this cheap way of doing business. We have here the richest country in the world and we have the United States marshals, through the Department of Justice, dickering with county superintendents and wardens and prison commissions to have prisoners maintained as cheaply as possible, and putting part of the burden on the States.

Our whole system of Federal housing in connection with the various departments is wrong and ought to be remedied. Only last week I visited Governors Island, in the harbor of New York, and found troops quartered in corrugated-iron buildings that were erected during the war for storage purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes additional.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will take such time on another item in the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Then I will only take time to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to these conditions.

Mr. MADDEN. I thank the gentleman very much.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Industrial Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio: Not to exceed $100,000 of the appropriation "United States industrial reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio, 1927," shall remain available until June 30, 1929, to enable the Attorney General to furnish the necessary material, supplies, and equipment, and to defray such other expenses as may be necessary to provide adequate facilities for the employment of prisoners and the development of the institution in accordance with the act entitled "An act for the establishment of a United States industrial reformatory," approved January 7, 1925.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this motion for the purpose of getting some information with reference to the continuation of this appropriation of $100,000 for the industrial reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman want me to make a statement on that?

Mr. LANHAM. Let me state what it is with reference to which I desire information and then I should like to have the statement.

I understand the purpose of this appropriation is the installation of a brick-making plant at this institution, and it becomes, it seems to me, rather important in this regard to inquire whether or not the Government here or elsewhere contemplates entering the business of brick making and thereby coming into competition with the brick manufacturers of the country, who pay, through their taxes, their share of the support not only of the Government in general but of those various penal institutions. I should like to know the purpose for which this money is to be expended, and I shall appreciate information from the chairman of the committee in this regard.

Mr. MADDEN. In the first place, the World War left us with a great institution that was used during the war as a camp. Later on, the gentleman and I suppose myself and all the other gentlemen who were here at the time enacted a law turning this institution over to the Department of Justice.

Mr. LANHAM. I am familiar with that law and with the establishment of the reformatory.

Mr. MADDEN. I am citing this preliminary to my answer to the gentleman's question. We found we had to do something to house the people that were incarcerated at the place. There were nothing but temporary war buildings there and we had to construct new buildings. We had to find employment for the men who were incarcerated. There were about 120 men there a year or so ago and there are now 375 men there. They will go crazy if we do not give them something to do.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman if it is contemplated that the brick to be manufactured in this plant shall be used at this institution?

Mr. MADDEN. Only.

Mr. LANHAM. Only; and not put in competition with outside brick manufacturing?

Mr. MADDEN. That is it. It is a humanitarian proposition.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to make this observation: Even if some of the brick had to be sold, what is wrong about it? I know there is a disposition on the part of some to say that convicts should not produce, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] is well aware that these men must be supported by some one, and one of the most humane things that can be done is to make a man self-supporting.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman is about to take all my time.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will get the gentleman more time.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope gentlemen will not take too much time on this item.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I want to make one observation.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say in parenthesis here that I promised the Democratic leader of the House that we would turn the Chamber over to them at half past 4, and we want to finish this bill before that time.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will not take any more time when I have finished this observation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. I should like to say, in response to the question of my colleague from Texas, that if this be for the training of men in order that they may go out after their period of incarceration and engage in this trade and be skilled in it, then, probably, there could be no objection to it; but if it be a matter of putting the Government in business to compete with institutions taxed by the Goverment in their private business, I think it is a very serious question.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to the gentleman, as I recall, a year ago when these hearings were first had, it was stated positively to the committee that they needed about 18,000,000 bricks to construct brick bulidings to take the place of these old, antiquated buildings that had been put up there at the cantonments.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is what I was about to add.

Mr. BYRNS. And this plant was asked for with a view to providing the brick necessary for Government purposes strictly. I do not understand the plant is to be used for commercial purposes in any sense. It will take about four or five years to make the necessary brick.

Mr. LANHAM. I am glad to have this information, and if the scope of it be merely the manufacturing of brick for this institution I think there would be no serious objection to it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I agree, Mr. Chairman, with my colleague from Texas that it is desirable always that convicts be put to the production of those things that are necessary and, as far as possible, can be used for State use. I think that method should be used, as far as practicable, and yet if it is impossible to employ the convicts at occupations producing things for use in State institutions, I think the State owes it to the convicts as well as the taxpayers to find other employment for its convicts and I think a diversification of industries is very much better than to center all the work on one or two.

I have heard a few of the men engaged in certain lines of industry on this subject, and they frequently suggest that convicts be made to work on the farm. Of course, it is obvious that such labor would then come in competition with the farmers, but I am not opposed to that to such extent as it seems wise and practicable to work convicts on the farm. I think the convicts should be dealt with humanely. They should have good living quarters, they should be well fed on plain, wholesome food; they should be well clothed, and they also should be required to produce. Society is not benefited by having any large number of people idle.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to my colleague that brick making is very laborious work, and my information is to the effect that in one State where in its penal institutions they manufacture brick as a part of the operations, they have come to use that branch of the service for disciplinary measures and men are put there when by reason of some infraction of the rules it is necessary to punish them. They put them at this hard work. Now, in searching for work for these small boys in the reformatory it occurs to me that it might be of doubtful propriety to put them at the work of making brick.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK or Texas. I will.

Mr. MANLOVE. Is it not a fact that practically all of the making of brick is done by machinery?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That is my information.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. We have labored to prohibit goods, wares, and merchandise, convict made, from entering another State. Would the gentleman like to see the industries diversified in the penitentiary and allow them to be sold in the open market?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think that could probably be done. What I am trying to suggest and emphasize is that it is desirable to diversify the industries so that men can be put to employment where they are best adapted. It is not right to the convicts nor is it right to the taxpayers to keep them idle.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say that they have been making shoes and textiles in these institutions, and the cities of Lynn and Lawrence, Mass., have been bearing the brunt of the convict labor.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There has been too great a disposition to centralize their occupations. I think that is a fundamental mistake. I think the industries should be sufficiently diversified so that the convicts can be put to such work for which they are best adapted. Within reasonable limitations, this is undoubtedly the best policy.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. When these buildings are constructed, after the necessary brick has been manufactured for use in the building on the industrial reformatory grounds at Chillicothe, will the manufacture of brick be continued?

Mr. MADDEN. It will take six or seven years to put the buildings up. We have been advised that the cost of the machinery will be more than paid by the lower cost of the brick that will be made by the prisoners. We have had no definite contract to bind future Congresses, but these prisoners are to be employed solely for the making of brick for the buildings in which they are incarcerated.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. The gentleman will agree with me that his answer is not quite responsive. He does not say whether the plant is likely to be dismantled later; and if so, what will become of the surplus brick.

Mr. MADDEN. A statement from me that the plant would be dismantled would be worth no more than a statement from any other person who knew as little about it as I do. I do not know what will be done six or seven years from now and perhaps that will not interest me or the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Let me inquire whether in that immediate neighborhood there is clay available for the making of brick?

Mr. MADDEN. The clay is there suitable for this work. It makes good brick; it is right there where the prisoners can be employed, and they ought to be employed as a matter of humanity.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Is there clay on the Government ground at that place? I had an understanding to the contrary.

Mr. MADDEN. We have a complete report on that question. The gentleman can be assured that there is clay there, good clay, clay which has been tested by the Bureau of Standards. The proper thing to do both from the standpoint of governmental economy and as a matter of practical humanity is to allow this proposition to go on.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. What about the policy of the Republican Party that is trying to get the Government out of business, if they continue the business after they have the necessary brick to put up the buildings at Chillicothe?

Mr. MADDEN. What are you going to do with these prisoners?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. I am frank to say from a humane standpoint that I am interested in them; and yet, at the same time, we have a great many people who have their money invested, to the extent of millions of dollars, in brick manufacturing plants, and even though we say that this brick will be used only in connection with Government buildings, nevertheless these private concerns have been selling to the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Every industry makes the same charge when we undertake to employ prisoners. Take the situation down at Atlanta. We have there a great cotton-duck mill. We are in the heart of the Cotton Belt. We had the same trouble there when we first began, but everybody now is happy, and the same is true of Leavenworth. We have at Leavenworth broom and shoe factories, and everybody is perfectly happy about that. Even the prisoners are, because they have something to do. We have been doing a great humanitarian service, and I hope the gentleman will feel it within his conscience to join in that movement.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. I am sorry that my conscience does not lead me just that way, and I would like to have the gentleman tell me how to make the brick manufacturers in my district happy, when they are now about 75 per cent closed down, and have a surplus stock on hand. If the gentleman could do that, I might agree with the gentleman, but I do not understand how to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman and myself both voted for the law that transferred the jurisdiction of this Chillicothe plant over to the Department of Justice, and we charged them with the responsibility of treating and disciplining these men, and of doing everything that is necessary to be done to punish them in the way they ought to be punished for the crimes that they have committed. They are there. They are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice, and God knows I would be the last man to drive any private concern out of business, but I think this is one thing where we can feel justified that we are doing right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support of United States prisoners: For the support of United States prisoners, including the same objects specified under this head in the acts making appropriations for the Department of Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1924, $6,141.18.

For 1925, $7,576.26.

For support of United States prisoners, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year 1927, $420,965.07.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "United States," in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER: Page 48, line 5, strike out the words "United States."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call the attention of all of the Members of this House, who believe that all fundamental principles of the Constitution should be respected, to the fact that I am shortly going to offer an amendment to this bill on page 53 to strike out the deficiency appropriation for the expenses of our troops in the war in which they are now engaged in Nicaragua and in China. Under our Constitution the power to declare war is vested in the Congress of the United States. Notwithstanding this we are at war in Nicaragua and in China although Congress has not declared war. Yesterday's paper noted that our American soldiers had again turned their machine guns upon the citizens of Nicaragua. It is a remarkable situation when we prohibit Chinese citizens from emigrating to America under the provisions of the quota, and at the same time send our armed forces into China to tell them how to run their Government.

Page 430 of the printed hearings on the deficiency bill now under consideration shows that General Richards testified that the deficiency resulting from the occupation of Nicaragua and China by our marines "was an obligation that was authorized at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and authorized by the President of the United States." Therefore it is clear that the war in which we have been and are now engaged in Nicaragua and in China has been declared by the President of the United States, by the Bureau of the Budget, and the Secretary of the Navy. I do not think Congress should ratify and validate this declaration of war. When you vote for the deficiency appropriation resulting from the occupation of Nicaragua and China you are approving of the declaration of war by the President of the United States, the Director of the Budget, and the Secretary of the Navy. There are many Members of this House who are opposed to the present military occupation of Nicaragua and China, and now is the time to show your opposition and cast your vote according to your convictions. Every man who believes in enforcing the Constitution and all of the amendments, including the eight eenth, which we hear so much about, should see to it that the war-making provision is enforced. Some say it is not war. Can this be peace, with our armed forces occupying Nicaragua and China and shooting their citizens? It is just as much war as when the German Imperial Government sent their armed forces into Belgium. I wish that under the rules of this House I could have an opportunity to force a record roll-call vote to see what Members are willing to ratify this declaration of war and validate the usurpation by the Secretary of the Navy, by the President, and by the Director of the Budget of power which is vested in the Congress of the United States under the Constitution. I am going to offer this amendment and hope that during the period of time between now and when we reach page 53 the Members will carefully consider the matter and when the vote comes on the amendment to stand up and vote and show that the Members of this House believe in the fundamental principles of the Constitution and that they do not ratify the declaration of war against China and Nicaragua.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement of Thomas J. Ryan, lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, for the loss of uniforms, equipment, clothing, and personal effects as a result of the earthquake and fire disaster in Japan on September 1, 1923, fiscal year 1928, $1,221.65.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of obtaining some information. Are not these refunds in the nature of claims?

Mr. MADDEN. They are all appropriated for by reason of special acts.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Acts heretofore passed?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Thank you.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Marine Corps: For provisions, subsistence, board and lodging of enlisted men, etc., $596,700; for military supplies and equipment, etc., $470,300; for transportation of troops, etc., $400,000; for miscellaneous supplies, etc., $351,000; in all, fiscal year 1927, $1,818,000.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. SCHAFER: Page 53, line 25, after the word "mails," strike out "and for expeditionary forces in Nacaragua and China."

Page 54, line 12, strike out "$1,818,000" and insert "$718,000."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment I spoke of a few moments ago. It is very unfortunate, indeed, that under the rules of the House it appears I will not be able to obtain a record roll-call vote on this amendment. If I could, I feel confident the amendment would pass by a decisive vote.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I wondered if the gentleman would like for me to tell him what this means, in a word?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. These appropriations here are to meet obligations occurring in 1927 and closed on June 30 last, and anything that would be done would not affect the situation at all.

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, yes. The gentleman from Wisconsin knew what these obligations were for before the gentleman gave the information. When we pass this deficiency to meet these obligations we are putting our stamp of approval upon the declaration of war with the citizens of Nicaragua and China, which war was not declared by Congress but by the President, the Director of the Budget, and the Secretary of the Navy, in violation of the war-making provisions of the Constitution. Furthermore, section 9 of Article I of the Constitution states that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. Congress has not declared war in Nicaragua and China, and therefore we have no right under the circumstances to make appropriations in this appropriation bill to carry on the war of the President, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Director of the Budget. If this is not war in Nicaragua and China to-day, I would like to know what war is. Let the bill for the obligations incurred by reason of these wars be sent to those responsible for said wars. How would the American people like it if, when a Chinese laundryman is murdered, the Chinese Government should send their troops to Washington, to Milwaukee, New York, and Texas to protect her nationals, and in doing so shoot down American citizens, as our armies have done in Nicaragua and China?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to take the responsibility, if he had the power to do it, to say that nowhere in the world shall we do anything to protect the rights of American citizens wherever they may be. That is what we are doing.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did the American Government send their Army and Navy to Belgium when the Imperial German Government went into Belgium? Were not American citizens holding property in Belgium? Suppose some oil interest should go into the depths of Africa, are we to send detachments of troops to every little town and hamlet in Africa where they might have an oil well or an American citizen employed? If we were to send our Army to foreign lands wherever an American citizen may go, or wherever American property may be located and where the life of such citizen or such property may be jeopardized, we would have to have nearly all the man power in America in the Army. Not only are Chinese citizens murdered here, but the daily newspapers carry stories of murders of citizens of other countries. If we are to set out to send our Army to every land where American citizens or American property may be in danger, we should also grant to other nations of the world the privilege of sending their armed forces into America when their citizens are murdered or the property of their citizens destroyed in America. All laws and constitutional provisions should be enforced. The war-making powers of the Constitution are just as sacred as any part of the Constitution and amendments. We should not put a stamp of approval upon the illegal war in which we are now engaged in Nicaragua and China, and which has been declared by the Secretary of the Navy, the President, and the Director of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the point that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] has presented is well made. He is not seeking by his amendment to secure the withdrawal of the troops from anywhere at the present time. We realize that such action can not be accomplished in this way. He stresses, and properly so, the point that troops were sent into foreign lands on active military duty without the authority of Congress, and when the troops were sent to Nicaragua we were in session. It would have been an easy matter for the Navy Department, or the President, to have come to Congress and obtained the authority and the appropriations necessary to carry out the expeditions. To be perfectly frank about it, at the time troops were sent to Nicaragua and Congress was in session had the department come to the House and asked for authority to use troops for that purpose, and if they had come here for appropriations for such purpose it would not have been granted. The gentleman from Wisconsin points out that, notwithstanding Congress was in session at the time, the troops were sent into a foreign country on a military expedition, without the authority of Congress and without funds appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I agree with the gentleman, and I think the gentleman from Wisconsin was only stressing the fact that although we have the right and power to protect our citizens wherever they may be, it seems that the United States Government is exercising that power only in countries unable to protect themselves.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am speaking of the powers of Congress. Declaring war, appropriating money, and directing how money should be spent is not an executive function. Not even by implication. It resides entirely with Congress; and the executive department, knowing that such action would not meet with the approval of the Congress at the time, sent these troops to Nicaragua. Now they come in a left-handed way and endeavor to secure the money spent without authority of Congress.

I think the gentleman's amendment is entirely proper. It may not carry, but it should at least serve notice on the department and on the Executive, if you please, that if United States troops are to be sent to a foreign country on a military expedition they should be sent only in pursuance of the authority written in the Constitution for that purpose.

Mr. CONNERY. I agree with the gentleman on that, and also when he says further that if a Chinese laundryman in this country were attacked or killed the Chinese Government would have the equal right to declare war on us. But the United States Government goes into Nicaragua and China and seeks to interfere in their affairs without the consent of their citizens.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Apropos the remarks of our friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] and of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], now that my friend from Missouri [Mr. DYER] has come on the floor, I wish to say that yesterday or the day before I heard on the floor a socialistic declaration about "chickens coming home to roost." Our friends, the gentleman from New York and I believe also the gentleman from Wisconsin, voted for the bill that was sponsored by our friend from Missouri [Mr. DYER], which is known as the China trading act.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not think that this gentleman from Wisconsin voted for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Possibly not, but that was an act which in behalf of just a few corporations in the United States gave special exclusive trading rights in China, giving them the right to do business with Chinamen in the old American way in behalf of Americans; and then, if I remember correctly, these two friends of ours from Wisconsin and New York likewise voted for the supplemental bill of our friend from Missouri [Mr. DYER] to exempt these China trading corporations from paying income taxes to the United States Government.

Of course, the chickens come home to roost, according to the socialistic declaration referred to, and now that they have given these Chinese corporations of our friend from Missouri these exclusive privileges in China, with our flag behind them to protect them, of course when the necessity arises the President must send our marines into China to protect our friend DYER and his China trading corporations. That is all I have to say at this time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] usually is well informed as to matters under discussion in the House. I do not know what companies he would have you believe the legislation to which he made reference gave protection to, or was intended for, but it does not apply to any company such as he referred to—the Standard Oil or the American Tobacco Co., or any of those big corporations—because they have not taken advantage of the so-called China trading act to incorporate under it. In fact, the taxation benefits to these companies are not of great value. The 1926 revenue act has given practically these same exemptions to American citizens and corporations engaged in foreign trade in all other countries. There have been only a few companies, some 50 or so, very small companies, who have taken out charters under the China trading act. None of those operating with any great capital have taken advantage of it; in fact, they have refused to take advantage of it. All of the big concerns operating in foreign trade in China are under British charters, operating under British laws, so far as this country is concerned. The troops that have gone to China have gone there for the sole purpose of protecting American lives. The British Government has had troops there, not in any great amount, but many more than we have had.

Mr. BUTLER. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. DYER. They have had thousands where we have had only a few hundred. All we have had in China, now or at any time, are a small number of marines, and the Navy has had some few ships there, but only with the idea which the President had in mind to protect American lives. Whenever it is necessary to do that it is the duty of the President to send our forces, because the Chinese people under the present conditions, with imperialism exercising sole power in China, are unable to protect foreigners. For that reason also we have our own courts in China to exist and operate, as we have the right to do. Under our treaties with China for the protection of and to maintain law and order among our own people our citizens are entitled to protection in life, in property, in China, and they are entitled by treaties to engage in business in that country.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does the gentleman think as a matter of principle that where American lives and property are in jeopardy in foreign countries it is proper and necessary for the Executive to obtain permission from Congress to use the forces of the United States for their protection?

Mr. DYER. No; he does not have to do that, and it is the duty of the President to provide that protection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman stated, if I understood him correctly, that there were some fifty-odd corporations organized under this China trade act, and the gentleman further stated that none was associated with the larger corporations. Will the gentleman put in the RECORD the basis of his information?

Mr. DYER. I will put in the name of each concern that has been incorporated under this law.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And the gentleman states that none of these concerns is controlled by or are subsidiaries of the larger corporations?

Mr. DYER. They are not, so far as I am informed. They are simply small companies.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But they may be subsidiaries of the larger companies.

Mr. DYER. My information is that none of them are. The information requested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is as follows:

CLASSES OF BUSINESS REPRESENTED BY CHINA TRADE ACT CORPORATIONS

Automobiles (total, 10 companies operating): American-Chinese Co., Tientsin; Asia Motors, Shanghai; Bills Motors; China Motors; Electric Service Corporation; H. S. Honigsberg & Co.; Mark L. Moody & Co.; Oriental Motor Co.; Union Motors; and Universal Hire Service.

Real estate (2 companies operating): Asia Realty Co., China Realty Co.

Rugs (1 company operating): Fette Rug Co., Peking.

(NOTE.—Would not pass incorporation under China trade act until this company took on the agency for the National Aniline Chemical Co. and as such was developing a market for American dyes.)

Steamship operators: (4 companies; 1 voluntarily dissolved, 1 incomplete and now in course of having certificate of incorporation revoked; 2 companies operating, but both of these are in a very involved state): China Coast Transportation Co. (voluntarily dissolved); Hambleton China Co. (incomplete, charter being revoked): Yangtsze Navigation Co. (operating); Yangtsze Rapid Steamship Co. (operating).

Tobacco (1 company whose certificate is now being revoked): F. & E. Soter Tobacco Corporation (certificate being revoked).

Trading companies (8 companies): E. D. Bush & Co. (application now pending); China-American Trading Co., Tientsin (operating); Fobes Co. (never completed China trade act organization, certificate now being revoked in United States court); Frazer & Co., Tientsin (operating); Kuling Supply Co., Kuling (operating); North China Co., Shanghai (certificate revoked); Standard Products Co., Shanghai (operating); Wah Chang (voluntary dissolution—took this course rather than have certificate revoked in United States court).

Trust companies (1 company): Raven Trust Co. (incomplete as a China trade act corporation, but operating as Delaware corporation until China trade act organization is complete).

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Major alterations, naval vessels: Toward the alterations and repairs required for the purpose of modernizing the U. S. S. Oklahoma and Nevada as authorized by the act approved March 2, 1927, $5,635,000, to remain available until June 30, 1929: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for alterations to increase the range of the turret guns of such ships.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to postpone the consideration of this item until we have finished the bill, and then we will probably be able to give more time to this item than we could now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass over this paragraph for the present and return to it later. Is there objection?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to my colleague from Illinois that there are a number of Members of the House present right at this moment who have their minds very well made up on just what they are going to do in connection with the amendments that are to be offered by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and I think it is rather unfair to them to place the time for a vote on these amendments in a haze. A vote may be reached to-day or it may not be reached until sometime to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it will be reached to-day.

Mr. BRITTEN. Word was sent out yesterday, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, advising Members of the House to be present after 1 o'clock to-day. They are here, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to recognize that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BRITTEN. With that statement, I shall not object, but I do not think the gentleman's request should be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose, of course, my good friend will give us every opportunity in the wide world to notify the Members of this House to be present when this item is reached?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly. The reason for my request, and in order that everybody may understand it, was that a great many Members wanted to go away and come back when the vote was reached. I said I would ask unanimous consent to pass over this item in order to accommodate them. There will be no advantage taken of anybody.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Could the gentleman give us some idea as to how much time will be required in the discussion of these amendments?

Mr. MADDEN. It depends on how antagonistic we all become.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will it take a half hour?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it will take more time than that.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It is the intention of the chairman to allow amendments to be offered to this paragraph at the conclusion of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Illinois will bear in mind that there has been at least a tentative agreement for an adjournment at 4.30?

Mr. MADDEN. That is one of the reasons I thought we could dispose of this matter quicker, if it stood alone, and dispose of all the rest of the bill in a hurry, so we could give the Chamber to the Democrats for their caucus.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's idea that it is possible for us to get through with the other pending amendments as well as the gun amendment before 4.30?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there is any question about that, because there are no other amendments of any consequence.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. If I may, I want to appeal to the membership of the House to allow us to expedite the consideration of the bill as much as possible this afternoon so we can give all of the time that may be necessary to the consideration of this gun-elevation proposition and at the same time enable us to give the Chamber to the Democrats at half past 4.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, Mr. Chairman, it is the understanding that at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill we will return to this portion of it and consider the amendments of which the chairman speaks?

Mr. MADDEN. That is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF INSPECTOR

Payment of rewards: For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers, fiscal year 1926, $25,500: Provided, That rewards may be paid, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, when an offender of the class mentioned was killed in the act of committing the crime or in resisting lawful arrest: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used to pay any rewards at rates in excess of those specified in Post Office Department order 7708, dated July 1, 1922.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question with respect to the proviso which limits the appropriation of $25,500, on page 56. I note the paragraph refers to a Post Office Department order, and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the provisions limiting this appropriation ought to be set out in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. It is $2,000 in any one case. That is what it means.

Mr. DOWELL. It seems to me that should be set out in the bill. I think it would be subject to a point of order, although I do not want to make one, because it has a good purpose. At any rate, to legislate post-office orders into the statute, it seems to me, is a bad practice.

Mr. MADDEN. You could not do that very well in this case for the reason that the maximum sum that can be paid in a case of robbery where conviction has been had is $2,000. They were paying as high as $5,000 in some cases.

Mr. DOWELL. That limitation could easily be put in.

Mr. MADDEN. But they go down as low as $25.

Mr. DOWELL. Even that could be put in, which would be better than making it a part of the statute. It seems to me that is bad practice.

Mr. MADDEN. We can not tell what they are going to pay until the thing is all settled. It is impossible, because it is a matter of negotiation. They have authority to pay up to $2,000, but they do at times pay as low as $25.

Mr. DOWELL. Then permit me to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it is up to the department, anyway, and why not leave it without this limitation in the appropriation?

Mr. MADDEN. If we left it without any limitation, it might cost us $5,000 in a given case, and we do not approve of that. Some were settled in that way and that is why we stopped it.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preparatory Commission on Armaments: For the expenses of further participation by the United States in the work of the preparatory commission at Geneva, for the purpose of making preliminary studies and preparations for a conference on the reduction and limitation of armaments, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including compensation of employees, travel, subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence in amounts authorized in the discretion of the Secretary of State (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act); and such other expenses as the President shall deem proper, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $70,000, to remain available until June 30, 1929.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking some questions of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with respect to this item. Has there been any proposal brought before the committee with respect to the holding of another conference on limitation of armament in the immediate future?

Mr. MADDEN. There is a commission to meet in February to prepare a program. This has already been provided for and they are at work upon it. The plan is that within a year or so there will be a new conference that will relate to the subject in extenso.

Mr. HUDSON. So there will be no other authorization for expenditure, for the preliminary work at least, of another conference?

Mr. MADDEN. No; we have that provided for.

Mr. HUDSON. And that is in this bill.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNAL REVENUE

Refunding taxes illegally collected: For an additional amount required for refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the revenue acts of 1918, 1921, 1924, and 1926, including the payment of claims for the fiscal year 1928 and prior years $43,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1928: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by such acts, including the names of all persons and corporations to whom payments are made together with the amount paid to each: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available to refund any amount paid by or collected from any manufacturer, producer, or importer in respect of the tax imposed by subdivision (3) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1924, or subdivision (3) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1921 or of the revenue act of 1918, unless the Commissioner of Internal Revenue certifies to the proper disbursing officer that such manufacturer, producer, or importer has filed with the commissioner, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, a bond in such sum and with such sureties as the commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the immediate repayment to the United States of such portion of the amount refunded as is not distributed by such manufacturer, producer, or importer, within six months after the date of the payment of the refund, to the persons who purchased for purposes of consumption (whether from such manufacturer, producer, importer, or from any other person) the articles in respect of which the refund is made, as evidenced by the affidavits (in such form and containing such statements as the commissioner may prescribe) of such purchasers, and that such bond, in the case of a claim allowed after the passage of this act, was filed before the allowance of the claim by the commissioner.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the second proviso in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MERRITT: Page 65, line 20, after the word "each," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, the provisions of this section which I have asked to be stricken out are admittedly impracticable of being carried out. The paragraph provides for repayments to those who have paid taxes which the courts have adjudged to be illegally collected.

This proviso sets forth that these illegal payments shall not be refunded unless the manufacturers to whom they are refunded shall agree to hand them out to somebody else. I know of many cases in my own district where manufacturers have paid these illegal taxes. The courts have decided they should be refunded. As a matter of fact these manufacturers have never collected these taxes from any purchaser of their goods, so that the effect of this proviso is to say that the decisions of the courts shall not be carried out, and I therefore think to prevent such injustice the proviso should be stricken out.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought not to strike out the proviso. It was put in last year at the suggestion of the Ways and Means Committee. The Ways and Means Committee, I understand, is about to report, in the new revenue bill which is soon to come before us, a provision that will be practicable.

In the meantime, we ought not to create a hiatus by striking this out, because to do so may involve the Government in some embarrassment. We ought to carry this provision along until the other provision is enacted and then we will have something that is practical, as I understand.

Mr. MERRITT. Does the gentleman understand that the provision in the new revenue bill will take care of these old cases?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what it will provide.

Mr. MERRITT. The law as it now stands is a denial of justice to men whom the courts have decided should receive back these taxes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know just what the provision is, but I think we ought not to eliminate this proviso until we get the other provision enacted into law.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. This was put in to take care of the refund from automobile taxes, was it not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Not upon general taxes, but upon taxes where the producer had collected a tax from the consumer.

Mr. MADDEN. On automobile accessories.

Mr. MERRITT. But the fact is that some of my constituents manufacture staple articles, sold at regular market price, which the Treasury Department decided should be considered as automobile parts and therefore subject to the tax. The courts then decided that the contention of the manufacturer was correct with respect to such things as bolts and screws in general consumption. The courts decided they were not automobile parts and were not therefore subject to the tax.

They sold them at the regular market price. The court said they shall get the tax back, but this proviso says that they can not get it back unless they hand it over to some one else.

Mr. HUDSON. They collected the tax from the consumers, did they not?

Mr. MERRITT. No; they did not.

Mr. HUDSON. They had to in order to sell because the Federal Government had levied the tax and before they sold it they had it taxed. It is true that after they sold them they could not get the tax back to the purchaser, but they are not out anything because they do not get the rebate.

Mr. MERRITT. They did not add the tax.

Mr. MADDEN. We ought not to settle the question this way. Let the new legislation clarify it. By striking out the proviso you are only complicating the situation.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If gentlemen will look at the tax bill that is soon coming up, they will find that it clarifies the situation where the consumer did not pay the tax. There are two exceptions, and one applies to the conditions spoken of by the gentleman from Connecticut why the consumer did not pay the tax.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have not the floor.

Mr. KETCHAM. Do I understand that this provision in the tax bill is retroactive?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; it clears up the whole situation and requires a bond only where the ultimate consumer pays the tax.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

Enforcement of narcotic and national prohibition acts: The limitations upon the amount which may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia under this head in the acts making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal years 1927 and 1928 are hereby amended so as to authorize the expenditure of not to exceed $603,600 for said purpose during the fiscal year 1927, and not to exceed $658,320 for said purpose during the fiscal year 1928, and the limitation upon the amount which may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia from the appropriation "Collecting the internal revenue, 1928," is hereby amended so as to authorize the expenditure of not to exceed $8,949,680 for said purpose.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman for what purpose this money is to be expended?

Mr. FRENCH. Speaking in behalf of the committee, the item to which the gentleman refers is made necessary because of the transfer from the Internal Revenue Bureau to the Bureau of Prohibition. It is intended to take care of the expense incurred in that transfer.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is this $658,000 for both the narcotic and prohibition?

Mr. FRENCH. It would apply to both. You created a bureau of prohibition that has to do with both, and takes over the duties that theretofore had devolved upon the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does it cost more under the new bureau?

Mr. FRENCH. We have not had an opportunity to compare the cost under the new plan. The work has been going on under that bureau only a few months. This is to straighten out the financial appropriations that were made when the bureau took over the work.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to make this statement? It seems that this was for office work that was done in the bureau before and is not for additional field work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. May I ask the gentleman a question? Has he noticed that Mr. Lowman has stated that they should stop preaching prohibition and preach temperance, and does the gentleman think it is going to cost as much to preach temperance as it has to enforce prohibition?

Mr. HUDSON. If the people are as slow to understand what temperance means, I think it will cost as much.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I shall not object to the item, but I want to say this: That the more you try to enforce the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment the more it will be demonstrated that it can not be enforced, even if you call out the Army and the Navy, as has been suggested by one of the leaders of the prohibition movement in this country.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to a few things that come from the Anti-Saloon League, and I think it will be quite a surprise to most Members of the House and to Members of the Senate also. According to the statement of the Anti-Saloon League they expended from 1883 to 1918, $50,000,000. In 1919 they spent $2,500,000. In 1926 they estimated the expenditures at $2,000,000 and from 1920 to 1925 the sum of $13,065,313.72, making a total expenditure by the Anti-Saloon League of $67,565,313. That is what it has cost to obtain this dry legislation and the endeavor to coerce the Government to enforce the act. Now, I want to close my remarks by asking permission to print the items and the States wherein the money was expended as taken from this pamphlet issued by the Anti-Saloon League, which I have.

Mr. KETCHAM. Reserving the right to object, I am interested to know whether or not the mantle of our former associate, Col. John Philip Hill, has fallen on the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BLANTON. It is not necessary to ask that question. It is self-evident.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I assure the House that I shall not ride a white horse at least. I shall not vote for a protective tariff and many things necessary from a Republican standpoint, but I shall emulate him in calling attention to the failure of the Volstead Act and point to a way by which temperance can be obtained without coercive legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland to print certain matter in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The league has spent $67,565,313.

Amount of money collected and expended by the National Anti-Saloon League and 37 State leagues from 1920 to 1925, inclusive. This report is taken from the official records of the league and never before has been made public.

The Clerk read as follows:

COAST GUARD

Rebuilding and repairing stations, etc.: For an additional amount for rebuilding and repairing stations and houses of refuge, temporary leases, rent, and improvements of property for Coast Guard purposes, including use of additional land where necessary, fiscal year 1928, $61,600.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the Congress to the fact that in this paragraph an expenditure of $61,000 is added to many more that we have formerly appropriated for the purpose of guarding our coasts. We are all in favor of that. It is necessary for the protection of the lives and the property of the people of the Nation, but in contrast with that I call attention to the fact that spreading from the Alleghanies to the Rockies is the Valley of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and that great river is by far a greater menace to the people of these United States than any enemy that can invade our coasts, which are to be protected through this appropriation and others. I note that the Treasury of the United States is charged with all of the expenditures for guarding the coast. I call attention to the fact that only to-day we have been reminded by the President of the United States that the poor suffering people of the lower Mississippi Valley—people who are suffering not from an enemy that is particularly theirs but from an enemy of the people of the entire United States which strikes without opportunity of being stayed by the hand of diplomacy—are asked, and we of this Congress are asked, to provide means for stopping the striking of that enemy and to assess a part of that cost to the sufferers on the river. I say, unlike the fellows of the coast, the poor, suffering men, women, and children of the Mississippi Valley and its tributaries are asked by this administration and by the country to bear a part of that cost. One is an enemy that strikes from outside, the other is an enemy that strikes from inside. The protection of the coast and the protection of the people of the Mississippi Valley are similar in that each is a national duty. Why discriminate against the people of the Mississippi Valley and its tributaries, when you protect the coast line of those on our oceans?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Is it not true that this Government has constantly been appropriating not to take care of an enemy, as the gentleman terms it, but of the menace of the flood waters of the Mississippi Valley? Has not Congress after Congress appropriated for that purpose, and has Congress ever withheld its interest in trying to take care of the menace of the flood waters of the Mississippi Valley?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Congress has appropriated all of the money, as I understand it, that has been asked for by the Mississippi River Commission, but Congress has appropriated it in the same manner that the engineers are asking for it to-day—to do the work in an incomprehensive manner, piecemeal, that will be of no benefit after it is done.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair to state the facts about this thing, and I happen to know them. The statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] is somewhat misleading. The law provides that $10,000,000 a year shall be appropriated for the Mississippi flood control. That money is being provided and has always been provided under the law. The law has not been violated under any circumstances.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I did not seek to intimate that it had, but I said that we had appropriated everything that they asked for.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman said that we are doing it piecemeal. We are doing it according to law. We are giving everything that is authorized.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The gentleman misunderstands me. I say the work on the Mississippi has been done in a piecemeal manner.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not our fault.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS PUBLIC BUILDING PROJECTS

New York, N. Y., courthouse and post office: For reconstruction of roof, $12,000.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call attention to the appropriation of $12,000 for the repair of the roof of the old courthouse and post-office building in Park Row, New York City. In my judgment, this is just dumping $12,000 of the taxpayers' money into a well. Of course, I realize some protection must be afforded to the roof, some repair must be made, but the old courthouse building in New York City, which is now occupied both as a courthouse and as a post office, is inadequate and antiquated. It was established by joint resolution of Congress May 16, 1866, to be used as a courthouse and post office. An interesting legal discussion of the status of the building and its site may be found in the case In re Lyman (55 Fed. Rep. p. 29). The building has far outlived its usefulness. The Government at this time must rent quarters in the expensive building across the street, the Woolworth Building, in order to house the judges and to house those parts of the courts not used for jury trials. A committee of distinguished lawyers and judges met in New York City last week, at the suggestion of the Hon. Martin T. Manton, senior circuit court judge, and plans were formulated for a new building. A joint resolution will be introduced in Congress by me to-day looking to the establishment of a new courthouse near the old courthouse. The officials of the city of New York, the mayor, and the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York have been consulted, and they feel that the old post office should be moved up town near the new post office, at Thirty-third Street and Eighth Avenue, and an exchange of property effectuated in New York's civic center at Chambers Street, so that the old building can be removed, leaving City Hall Park as it was many years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. But, in the meantime, you know, you have got to use this building, and we want a roof on it.

Mr. WELLER. Very true; and I am serving notice on the gentlemen of Congress and the country that we are coming down here and we are going to ask Congress——

Mr. MADDEN. But in the meantime you had better get the roof on the old building, without protest.

Mr. WELLER. We have a roof on now which keeps out the wind and weather.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman protests against the thing you have got to have.

Mr. WELLER. In the meantime we are going to pursue this plan. We are going to ask for an appropriation from Congress, and we do not want to go through the Budget; that a joint committee of the House and Senate take up this matter with a view of establishing——

Mr. MADDEN. And who is this joint commission of the House and Senate?

Mr. WELLER. I am introducing a bill providing for a joint committee of the House and Senate.

Mr. MADDEN. I am afraid the gentleman will never get that bill passed.

Mr. WELLER. We up in New York feel we are entitled to have it passed irrespective of the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but we want things done our way frequently, but that is going a good deal further than anybody has gone.

Mr. WELLER. At the same time the city of New York is willing to make an exchange of land whereby there shall be no additional cost to the United States Government; the cost will be to tear down the old courthouse building and an appropriation sufficient to build a new modern courthouse which will house the court for the district of the southern district of New York. If that is done a courthouse can be constructed which will be also a revenue producing one, for offices and space may be rented.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion that might help his future intercourse with Congress?

Mr. WELLER. I am always glad to receive a suggestion from the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Not to ask to make innovations which go outside of traditional practice if he expects to get anywhere much.

Mr. WELLER. The Government is paying approximately $38,000 a year for quarters in the Woolworth Building across the street because there is not sufficient room in the old post-office building and courthouse. It ought to be a modern courthouse. You must take into consideration that the conditions in the old courthouse in New York where juries and grand juorors are housed are abominable, the ventilation is detrimental to the health of those who serve on them. The judges and jurors and grand jurors are often taken sick on account of the conditions. In addition to the regular court business we have the naturalization of citizens, and that work in the Federal court sometimes brings as many as 5,000 persons in one day into that building. The building is unsafe and insanitary, the elevators are not safe or sufficient, it has been condemned by everybody, and it would probably be condemned by the fire department of the city of New York if an investigation were made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and I do this particularly to ask a question in regard to a previous section. I notice that the sum of $100,000 is made available until June 30, 1929, to enable the Attorney General to furnish the necessary material, supplies, and equipment, and to defray such other expenses as may be necessary to provide adequate facilities for the employment of prisoners and a development of the institution, in accordance with the act entitled "An act for the establishment of a United States Industrial Reformatory," approved January 7, 1925, referring to the Chillicothe Reformatory.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it has not been knocked out. It has been allowed to remain in, and we have given a complete explanation. We are trying to find something for prisoners to do to keep them from going insane, and trying to use the money for the purpose of enabling them to make brick for the buildings there. Protests have come from various brickyard owners, but we did not think those protests ought to be paid much attention to as a matter of fact.

Mr. REECE. It is not contemplated to make brick and cement plants to produce those materials there in competition with plants maintained by private resources?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all.

Mr. REECE. I rose to get the information, because I did not think such should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Liberty Loan Building: For completion of the construction of two additional stories, $125,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I have been down to the Liberty Loan Building on a number of occasions, and it appears to me to be one of the most unsightly public buildings constructed in Washington. I want to ask the gentleman whether the $125,000 will improve the looks of that building as well as add two stories?

Mr. MADDEN. The two stories are already on, and its looks are to be what they already are.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am very sorry to know a building like that is called the Liberty Loan Building, as it looks more like a liberty hall building.

Mr. MADDEN. We are appropriating $125,000 to finish the interior of the two stories which have already been put on.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And there is no intention of improving the architecture of the building?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not see how it could. There it is and there it stands.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total appropriations for projects in the District of Columbia under section 5, act of May 25, 1926, as amended, $2,100,000.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall not take time but simply ask permission to insert a few remarks on buildings along Pennsylvania Avenue in connection with our building program. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this big item in the deficiency appropriation bill, it may not be out of place to speak about a situation which has arisen in Washington. The Nation, through the action of Congress, is going to spend vast sums of money in this city for buildings. These are needed expenditures to house the activities of the Government.

But above the mere physical needs we are also moved to make these expenditures because we feel there is a national desire to make the Nation's Capital architecturally and artistically and scenically worthy of the Nation.

But while we are appropriating money so liberally to beautify Washington, according to the local newspapers, there are property owners in this city who will neither cooperate with nor conform with these plannings. At an important point on Pennsylvania Avenue it is proposed to erect a building which the Fine Arts Commission has found entirely out of harmony with what the Government is planning on the opposite side of the Avenue.

Interested only in advertising and profits, a corporation proposes to erect what I assume with be a garish piece of architecture. They propose to attract buyers for their wares even if it may detract from the city which we are trying to make fit our Nation, and that at great expense.

I trust that some ways and means may be found to stop this "public be damned" effort on the part of the corporation until the Congress can enact a law giving some one authority to regulate construction along the streets and avenues facing Government buildings.

Nor is the issue involved limited to Washington. Through similar greed we are not only standardizing all the main streets and byways of the country but we are making America from ocean to ocean a succession of gaudy and garish signboards to match the extravagantly painted store fronts.

The natural beauty of America is being sacrificed to greed. Every bit of natural beauty along a public highway is to some one only an invitation to extend the sale of pale pills or something equally inconsequential. These billboard makers are even vulgarizing the spelling and the use of the language, which we should cherish as a sacred heritage.

One may almost hope that some day there may be superassociation in America composed of all men and women who cherish ideals and who want to perpetuate the beauty of the countrysides pledged to refuse to patronize those who mar our towns and cities and our waysides.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army transportation: Credit is authorized and directed in the accounts of disbursing officers of the War Department for the payment of obligations heretofore or hereafter incurred for expert services under existing contract entered into by the War Department in connection with the construction of the ferryboat authorized by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1926.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 78, after line 14, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"For transportation of the Army and its supplies, etc., including the same object specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $578,100."

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall have to object to that now.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Will the gentleman withhold that objection for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GAMBRILL. It is very seldom that I take up the time of this House. The proposition I propose to present is one that can hardly be developed in five minutes. I ask the consideration of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment so as to provide funds for the removal of some of the most dangerous explosives from the ammunition depot at Curtis Bay, in the vicinity of Baltimore city. This amendment appropriates $578,110, and if it is accepted by the Committee of the Whole House, two other amendments will be offered for the appropriation of $121,476 and $100,000, respectively; thus, making the total amount appropriated for this purpose $799,586.

I am conscious of the difficulty which confronts the Maryland delegation in having an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole House when it has not the sanction of the powerful Committee on Appropriations. And yet I do not hesitate to make the assertion that the refusal of the Committee on Appropriations to include this item in the deficiency bill was based on misinformation, intolerance, and a lack of understanding of the menace to Baltimore city, its inhabitants, and its industrial life by this ammunition depot being at Curtis Bay. I have read the committee hearings, a copy of which I obtained yesterday, and it is evident that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and some of his colleagues dismissed this subject as being unworthy of serious consideration, and they did this on the false assumption that Baltimore city had sought this ammunition depot and now wanted to get rid of it.

If you will turn to page 469 of the committee hearings you will find this comment by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, referring as he was to the people of Baltimore city:

The CHAIRMAN. They begged them to put the arsenals there, and now they are importuning them to take them away.

What are the real facts and not the gratuitous conjectures on which the Committee on Appropriations acted?

This ammunition depot at Curtis Bay was established during the war, and its location near Baltimore was a war measure inaugurated without any solicitation on the part of the citizens of Baltimore or any official or civic body. Little information was obtainable at the time regarding its purpose or its use, but the general impression was that it would be used for the storage of airplane parts. It is safe to say that no one connected with the municipal affairs of Baltimore had any idea that this depot was intended to house the most powerful and dangerous explosives that human ingenuity could manufacture. And I venture the assertion that even though its use had been known, no one in the official life of Baltimore and no great or small industrial concern, however serious the menace to them, would have protested against the establishment of this depot if it was considered essential or necessary to the successful prosecution of the war. But since the war, with a knowledge of its menace to the life and property of the citizens of Baltimore, and with a knowledge, in a measure at least, of the vast concentration of high explosives at this depot, the city of Baltimore and the people having great property rights in its vicinity have made unceasing efforts to rid themselves of this danger and for the complete evacuation of this ammunition dump. It was felt that a measure of relief had been provided when the President and the Director of the Budget recommended to the House the insertion in the deficiency bill items aggregating $800,000 for the removal of the high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay depot, but the Committee on Appropriations disallowed these items on the ground that no emergency existed. It is quite evident from reading the hearings of the committee that the members thereof were of the impression that the depot is located at some remote section, far removed from Baltimore, and that if an explosion occurred, the destruction of lives and property would be confined to its immediate vicinity. Visualize if you will the situation. This depot is on Curtis Bay, one of the important estuarys of the Patapsco River and on an air line is within 5 miles of the City Hall of Baltimore, which may be said to be the heart of the commercial activities of the city.

Within 2 miles of the depot is over $100,000,000 worth of industrial property, most of it located there long before the depot was established or thought of. Opposite the depot is the great Davison Chemical Co., one of the largest, if not the largest, manufacturers of sulphuric acid in the country, with its delicate machinery and equipment. Very close to the depot is the United States industrial alcohol plant. Just across from the depot are the large elevators and railroad terminals of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Western Maryland Railroad Co. In immediate proximity to the depot are the large oil refineries and storage plants of the Prudential Oil Co., and across the Patapsco is the vast plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Curtis Bay is the only natural deep-water channel in the Baltimore region, and its industrial development is being prevented by the danger now existing. So we have this depot lying on the border of the most active industrial area of the city of Baltimore; on an important portion of our harbor; within 5 miles of the heart of the city, and just on the border line of the city itself. Just how much high explosives are stored in this depot, only the War Department knows, but it is illuminating to observe that the department estimated it would cost over $2,650,000 to remove all of the explosives, and it is known that at times there have been as high as 3,000,000 pounds of T. N. T., 158,000 pounds of tetryl, 1,700,000 pounds of black powder stored there, and the amount of smokeless powder has been estimated at anywhere from 15,000,000 to 45,000,000 pounds. The value of the stores has been given as $120,000,000. It is no exaggeration to say that an explosion at this depot would completely wreck or cause incalculable damage to the three great industrial centers of the port of Baltimore—Curtis Bay, Canton, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation—and bring great loss to Baltimore and perhaps cause death to hundreds of people. This is no figure of speech or idle prophecy; it is a fact that can not be dismissed by the laconic statement of Major General Williams that "The amount of danger is not sufficient to cause any real apprehension to the surrounding community." It is interesting to recall that in 1926 some of the Representatives in Congress from Maryland called on General Williams seeking to secure action looking to the removal of this ammunition, and in discussing the causes which might lead to the setting off of these explosives it was suggested that there was the ever-present danger of the ammunition being exploded by a bolt of lightning. This suggestion was dismissed by General Williams as an unheard-of possibility and as one unworthy of serious consideration; and yet within a few weeks after this statement by General Williams, the arsenal at Lake Denmark was practically destroyed by a bolt of lightning, with a large loss of life and the destruction of property amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars. And that at an arsenal which I heard described by a prominent naval officer as being the most favorably located depot under the control of the Navy. Should an explosion occur at Curtis Bay, the loss of life and property would be beyond description or prophesy, as the explosion at Lake Denmark was felt for 30 miles and the town of Mount Hope, several miles from the depot, was almost totally destroyed. We, the Representatives from Maryland, protest against this menace to the city of Baltimore, because of its ever-present and potential danger to the whole city, because it has and is blocking the normal expansion of its chief industrial center, and because no reason for its retention is to be compared to the danger to which the lives of the citizens of Baltimore and the owners of property are subjected by its existence—a danger which can not be estimated in money.

Apparently the Committee on Appropriations approached its consideration of this subject or made its decision on three major premises, all of them erroneous and conceived in a misconception of the real facts. First, the committee assumed that as no protest was made against the location of this arsenal at Curtis Bay, no heed need be given to the demands for the removal of the ammunition stored there. Secondly, that as the protests have been coming for three or four years for its removal, and no explosion has occurred, no emergency now exists for the transfer of these explosives. Thirdly, that the danger of the detonation of this ammunition is very remote. Bear in mind that this depot was located at Curtis Bay as a war measure, so as to offer quick and ample accommodations for transportation by water, and not because the depot was sought by the city of Baltimore. And then by a process of reasoning, which I can not follow, the Committee on Appropriations took the position that no emergency existed for the removal of the ammunition, because, forsooth, protests have been made for three or four years and the ammunition is still there and no explosion has occurred; and there it is apt to remain if the members of the committee are going to dismiss the subject with the gratuitous statement that the removal of this ammunition at this time is not urgent and no danger exists. The fact is that most of this ammunition would be removed to the depot near Ogden, Utah, which is 7 miles from the small city of Ogden, where there are 35 empty magazines; to Savanna, Ill., a remote reservation in the northwest part of the State of Illinois and on the Mississippi River; and to what is known as the depot at Charleston, S. C., which depot is in fact 11 miles from the city; and to Pig Point, in Virginia. But I address myself to the remarkable statement made by Major General Williams, and generously accepted by the committee, that there is no cause for "real apprehension."

Let us see how remote that danger is. I do not know the number of large ammunition depots in the United States in use by the Army and Navy, but I would assume that 20 would be a generous approximation. Then, if you will turn to the committee hearings, when the deficiency bill was before the Committee on Appropriations in the Sixty-ninth Congress, you will be met with the startling statement that since 1916 there have been six or seven disastrous explosions at ammunition depots, several in New Jersey, one at Black Tom Island, one near one of the Amboys, one at the Raritan Arsenal, and one at Lake Denmark, to say nothing of the disastrous explosion which occurred at Halifax and the one at London, both causing the destruction of millions of property and a large loss of life. Major General Williams reasons that in the ratio that 6 or 7 bears to 20 that the danger of an explosion at Curtis Bay is very remote, and in making this statement he takes an indefensible position. And as a complete refutation of the false assurances General Williams seeks to give of there being no danger it is only necessary to tell this committee that in September last over 100 shells loaded with high explosives were set off at this depot by a small fire, and for a time it appeared that a catastrophe was imminent.

This amendment should pass, and indeed there should be an amendment for the immediate and speedy removal of all this ammunition, which could be stored elsewhere without danger to the communities near which these depots are located. But if this objective can not be secured, then by all the demands of common sense and prudence let us adopt the amendment now before the committee and remove part of this ammunition which menaces the life and property of the citizens of Baltimore. To do less will be a great injustice to that city.

I know the difficulty of securing an appropriation which has not met the sanction of the powerful Committee on Appropriations, but simple justice demands that some relief be given Baltimore, and this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not know how to impress this proposition upon this body more strongly than has my colleague [Mr. GAMBRILL], nor more strongly than we presented the proposition at the last session of Congress, when we endeavored to have this item inserted into the bill and passed. As he has said, it has been recommended by the War Department; it has been recommended by the Bureau of the Budget and by the President. Only last evening I spoke to the Secretary of War and told him I was very sorry that this item had been left out of the bill, this being such a menace to the city of Baltimore. He said to me, "I have done all I can do. I recommended it, and it was in our tentative program; but what your committee has done is to strike it out, and I have no control over that." It does seem to me that in recommending all these appropriations which the Secretary of War wants for various things that certainly we ought to insert this one which he has recommended for the removal of these explosives. General Williams speaks about there being no danger, but you would have been surprised if on the 24th of September you had taken up your morning paper and found that in this Curtis Bay depot an explosion had taken place the day before [displays daily paper]. But that is true. The population was leaving there in automobiles, in carriages, and walking, trying to get away. A fire took place and the soldiers went there, as well as reporters, but the reporters were not permitted to enter because the authorities did not want the people to know just how serious the situation was. However, the fact is that an explosion took place on the 23d day of September last, and if it can take place and destroy a certain number of shells it can take place again and destroy a greater number of shells. At that time some 50 shells exploded.

This menace is right in the center of the industrial section of Baltimore city, which section is about a mile and a half from Curtis Bay. Curtis Bay is a town of a great many inhabitants, a town where they manufacture many articles, where the great coal piers are. It is a great industrial section. It is right across the river from Fort McHenry and very near the center of Baltimore city, where 850,000 people live.

All we are asking you is that some of this ammunition be removed. We are not asking that all of it be removed. There are 25,000,000 pounds of ammunition stored at this place, but we are not asking that all of it be removed. We are asking that the high explosives, the T. N. T., the amatol, and those other things which are liable to go off at any time, be removed.

I would not wish this thing on anybody else, but General Williams says it can be stored safely and remotely from any danger. He says it can be stored at a place where it will not menace a vast population of people, and he recommends that it be sent to Savanna, to Charleston, to Ogdon, to Pig Point, and at these places it will not be near any dense population; it will be far from everybody, it will be safe and the people of Baltimore will be relieved of this menace.

I do not know whether any explosion is going to take place there. I did not think it was going to take place but it did take place on the 23d day of last September, and if it had not been for the prompt arrival of the fire department, soldiers, and guards, we would have had a terrible conflagration, but we did not have it because of vigilance.

How would you like to live alongside of a menace of that kind? How would you like to have all of your municipal buildings, your Government buildings, and all those buildings menaced by 25,000,000 pounds of explosives? I do not think there is anybody here who would want it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Is it not a fact that the War Department admits they have places at which they can put this ordnance where it would not be a menace to anybody?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; they have selected the places to put it. Not only have they selected the places to put it but they have recommended its removal to those places, yet we can not get this committee to understand the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is only fair that the chairman of this committee should say a word on this subject. We are not as indifferent as the gentleman from Maryland says nor do we enter upon the consideration of these things from the standpoint he indicates. We enter upon the consideration of the problems that come before the committee with the greatest care within our power and with due deliberation and consideration of all the elements involved.

They propose here to remove explosives from Curtis Bay and from Raritan, N. J. The character of the explosives at Curtis Bay is high-explosive shell and shrapnel. The Chief of Ordnance, General Williams, assures us that there is very remote danger of any explosion of these shells. The explosions which occurred at other places were due to the fact that a fire started in bulk explosives. General Williams, the one man in the United States whose knowledge and experience is unquestioned everywhere throughout the world, tells the committee that there is no need to remove these explosives on account of the danger that exists to Baltimore.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I happen to know that the people in that neighborhood are in a state of continuous fear, and the mere fact that General Williams may tell them there is no danger does not amount to anything as far as they are concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. But he is presumed to know, and I am giving you my statement based on General Williams's knowledge and experience.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did General Williams tell you anything about the explosion that occurred on the 23d day of September last? I do not find one thing in his testimony about it.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not recall that he did. Now, the danger of an explosion from loaded shells would come through a fire of sufficient magnitude to burn down the storage and heat the shells sufficiently to detonate them. That is the only danger there is of an explosion from these shells or damage to property or life. There is no part of the ammunition used by the Army that is so little a menace to a community than that which is stored at Curtis Bay, if the information which comes to the Committee on Appropriations be true, and we assume it must be true, because it comes from the technical experts of the Army, and they say that there is no necessity for moving these explosives.

What are they trying to do here? The request for the removal of these shells at Raritan and Curtis Bay did not come from the War Department. The value of the material is $60,000,000, $40,000,000 at Raritan and $20,000,000 at Curtis Bay.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Would the gentleman, in spite of General Williams's statement, like to live in that neighborhood?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not on the witness stand as to what I would like to do.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I know, but the psychological element of fear is there. Those people are afraid of it.

Mr. MADDEN. I am giving the business side of this thing, the War Department's side of it and the Treasury's side of it, too. The tonnage to be removed is 16,800 tons from Curtis Bay and 32,200 tons from Raritan. These gentlemen want this ammunition sent to Savanna, Ill.; Ogden, Utah; Pig Point, Va.; and Charleston, S. C. The cost of removal from Curtis Bay alone is $800,000, and the cost of removal from Raritan is $2,310,000, which makes a total of $3,110,000.

We are advised, as I said before, by the responsible expert of the Government in the matter of explosives that there is only remote danger from these explosives at Curtis Bay.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. No; not just now. Let me first finish this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for about two minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will not the gentleman take three minutes to answer my question?

Mr. MADDEN. I will answer the gentleman in any event later.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. No one will say that the explosives will not explode. Of course, they will explode. This is what they are manufactured for.

The committee went thoroughly into the situation at the last session. They recommended against the removal of these explosives then and were sustained by the House. They have again gone thoroughly into this question, notwithstanding what my friend from Baltimore has said. The gentleman has said that we approach the question in a spirit of levity. We do not. We are serious. We are serious-minded men and we are all old enough to have quit our practices of levity, and we go on and on and we do the thing we think is best for the whole country.

In the opinion of the Chief of Ordnance of the War Department, who has had long experience with explosives, let me repeat, the danger from explosives of this character is not sufficient to justify the expenditures proposed or involved in the cost of transportation and removal.

I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to ask the gentleman—and in asking the gentleman, of course, I am also asking the House—does the gentleman think that for the mere sum of $800,000 it is fair to keep 850,000 people under the menace of this situation at Curtis Bay, regardless of the millions of dollars invested in this section and in the city of Baltimore? Does the gentleman think it is fair to keep them in this situation of fear all the time for the purpose of saving a mere sum of $800,000?

Mr. MADDEN. No one would give more ready response to the gentleman's suggestion than I if I thought there was a menace, but I believe in my soul that there is no menace, based on what the Chief of Ordnance has said.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN THE DIPLOMATIC GALLERY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call the attention of the membership of the House present in the Committee of the Whole to the fact that we are honored to-day by having as visitors in the diplomatic gallery the Governor General of Canada and Viscountess Willingdon, accompanied by the Minister of Canada and Mrs. Massey, and the United States Minister to Canada and Mrs. Phillips. [Applause.]

FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I submit that debate is closed on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted and continuation of the debate by means of pro forma amendments virtually is by unanimous consent.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I should object——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the people who live in the neighborhood of this arsenal are in a constant state of alarm. I do not live on the western shore of Maryland. I live on the other side of the bay, but I was in Curtis Bay about a year ago and some of the most reputable people there told me that the entire neighborhood was in a state of apprehension constantly on account of these high explosives.

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois says he is discussing this matter from a business standpoint and from a practical standpoint. Of course, we should all discuss the matter from this standpoint, but the humanitarian standpoint is also a business standpoint and a practical one. These people and the people of Baltimore city are afraid of these explosives. The psychological effect is bad. The War Department admits it has a place to put these explosives where they can be of no possible menace or danger. The only thing the Chief of Ordnance will say is that in his opinion there is not sufficient danger to justify the expenditure of $800,000. He does not say there is no danger, but not sufficient danger to life and property to justify the cost. What right has he or any man to say that the possibility of destruction of human life and property is not worth $800,000 or any other sum?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think that there is one fact that is entitled to very great consideration? General Lord, who is a very experienced Army officer and also the Director of the Budget, has examined into this matter and has come to the conclusion that the action desired ought to be taken.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The committee will be very glad to have that information.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact there is a large university at Baltimore with students from all parts of the country?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is true.

Mr. REED of New York. And is it not true that there is a very large conservatory of music there with girls from all sections of the country?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is true.

Mr. REED of New York. So it is not altogether a local question. Every man here may have a very vital interest in the matter with relation to his own district.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is quite true.

Mr. REED of New York. And is it not true there is danger at any time through lightning striking this plant and causing an explosion?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. There is no question about it. There is not a State in this Union whose youth is not represented in Baltimore, either in a medical school, a law school, or in its other great universities and institutions of learning.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were—ayes 42, noes 54.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MADDEN and Mr. GAMBRILL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 78 ayes and 70 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, after line 14, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For transportation of the Army and its supplies, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Raritan ordnance reserve depot, fiscal year 1928, $1,621,890."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the arguments that have been advanced in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL] apply with equal force to the amendment that I have offered. This provides for Army transportation for the removal of high explosives at Raritan Arsenal in the vicinity of New Brunswick. Within a radius of 6 miles of this munitions storage plant there are over 150,000 people. It is almost adjacent to the cities of New Brunswick, Perth Amboy, and South Amboy and within a metropolitan area with a population of 8,000,000. The people of my district are very fearful of the dangers attendant to the storage of these explosives at Raritan Arsenal. There are over a million pounds of T. N. T. stored there, within a county that is one of the greatest industrial counties of New Jersey. That fact is retarding the economic growth and development of Middlesex and adjacent territory.

In 1918 we had a disastrous explosion at the Morgan Arsenal with a great loss of life and an attendant loss of millions of dollars in property damage. Later, we had a series of explosions at Camp Raritan, and in 1924 there was a disaster at the ammonite plant, adjoining Raritan Arsenal, resulting in the loss of 20 lives and hundreds of thousands in damage to property. I submit that the situation causes a feeling of apprehension that is entirely justified in the minds of the people of my district. I believe that the Government of the United States is not justified in storing high explosives in times of peace in an industrial area of this character, and I submit that this body ought to take action similar to that which has been taken on the previous amendment, and adopt an appropriation which will provide for the removal of dangerous explosives that constitute a potential menace to life and property. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know when this arsenal was built?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It was built in 1918, during the time of the war.

Mr. BUTLER. The people have not moved up side of it by the sale of town lots?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; it was a war-emergency measure.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will confine what statements I have to make to a disclosure of the number of private institutions manufacturing high explosives in the State of New Jersey. New Jersey is honeycombed with this kind of institutions. Nobody is asking for the removal of a private institution. Now, let us see what they have there. They have the Atlas Powder Co. They have the du Pont Powder Co. They have a du Pont Powder Co. again, and yet another. Then there is the Hercules Powder Co. All the powder companies of any consequence in the United States are located in New Jersey and Delaware.

Mr. EATON. Are they located in the center of population?

Mr. MADDEN. They are located in New Jersey, and I venture to say there is no less population where they are than there is where the gentleman is seeking to have the removal of this explosive from.

Mr. EATON. Let me say that the manufacturing plants dealt with by the gentleman from Illinois are black powder and dynamite plants, and if one of those exploded it would not be more than a firecracker, but when it comes to exploding tons of T. N. T. that is a different matter.

Mr. MADDEN. You can not explode T. N. T.

Mr. EATON. It has exploded.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no danger of its exploding where it is. There ought not to be such a cry for the removal of these explosives to another part of the country. Just as soon as we get them put some place else, then the people there will demand their removal to some other place. What are you going to do about it? The Army is demanding that we shall give them the right to carry war supply ammunition. On the other hand, everybody who demands that we shall conform to the views of the Army is also demanding that we shall do away with the supply of ammunition by removing it to some point from which it can not be removed when we need it. They want to get it a thousand miles away from any place. It is just a question of spending money for no purpose at all. There is very little danger in either of these cases, and I am surprised that the Committee of the Whole voted to spend $800,000 to move the explosives, so called, from Curtis Bay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military posts: For construction and installation at military posts of buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto, as authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1927, without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, including also in connection with the erection of barracks at Fort Jay, Governors Island, not to exceed $30,000 for the employment, by contract or otherwise, of the services of architects, or firms, or partnerships thereof, and other technical and professional personnel as may be deemed necessary without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law governing the employment and compensation of employees of the United States, $6,162,000, to remain available until expended; of this amount $3,680,000 shall be payable from the military post construction fund created by section 4 of the act approved March 12, 1926, and $2,482,000 shall be payable out of the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to the language beginning on page 78, line 19, down to the bottom of the page, and to lines 1 and 2 on page 79, up to and including the words "United States."

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at this point to strike out line 19 on page 78——

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the decision on the point of order that amendment is not in order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can discuss his amendment, but he can not offer an amendment to a portion upon which a point of order is pending.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman, it is rather embarrassing to me to object to an item in the deficiency appropriation bill, particularly being a new Member and to seemingly place my views and opinions as against the Appropriations Committee, composed of so many of the senior Members of the House, but I am asking the saving of moneys instead of spending same. I have given very deep study and thought to Governors Island from a business man's point of view and can see the tremendous advantage to the business interests if it is possible to transform Governors Island into an express landing station for airplanes and hydroplanes.

As a military post it is obsolete. In 1800, when ceded by the Federal Government to the State of New York, there was need for a military post on Governors Island. In 1810 there were almost more soldiers on Governors Island than in 1927.

These soldiers have been used for parade purposes and the island has been used for a makeshift headquarters for the Division of the East. Outside of that, the only use for the island has been its parade grounds, polo fields, golf course, tennis courts, baseball field, running tracks, and afternoon teas.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. As I understand, the gentleman is not opposed to bettering the housing conditions in the Military Establishments.

Mr. COHEN. Oh, no; I am very much in favor of improving the present housing conditions through all of the Government posts, wherever they are needed.

One objection—and the only objection that has been made—to the use of Governors Island for a landing field has been the question of fog. The honorable chairman [Mr. MADDEN] also quoted the same objection.

I have a statement from Mr. Scarr, the head of the meteorological department of the city of New York, in which he states that the fog conditions on Governors Island in 1926 covered 22 days, and over a period from 8 to 56 years an average of 24 days. He also stated to me personally that the fog condition on Governors Island was 1 per cent better than any other proposed airport around New York.

Such noted fliers as Commander Byrd, Clarence Chamberlain, and Casey Jones, the wonderful air pilot now connected with the Curtis company, have stated to me that Governors Island is ideal for an airport or landing field.

Major General O'Ryan, president of the Colonial Air Transport Service, which company is running airplane service between New York and several of the different cities, stated to me less than a week ago that Governors Island would be ideal for a landing field.

During the war it was used as a training field for aviators, and if inexperienced flyers could use the same, I can see no objection to experienced flyers.

My desire to have the appropriation of $1,860,000, which has been appropriated for the housing conditions of Governors Island—and I fully agree that an improvement in the same is needed—held up is to give this body the opportunity of passing upon the merits of Governors Island for an airport.

ITS ADVANTAGES

Within five minutes by ferry of the lower part of New York City; the possibility of connections by the extension of the mail tubes so that mail can be delivered in New York in less than 10 minutes as against 1 hour and 50 minutes as at present as per post-office records.

This thought is not new with me, and I refer to a report of the Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, No. 1653, in which a committee of this House recommended Governors Island for an airport and also to the bill introduced by Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. PRALL in 1926, and by Senator Wadsworth in the Senate, to transform Governors Island into an airport. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, what I desire to point out and what I am seeking to do is to not to hold up the appropriations for military posts for the barracks where they are needed but simply to defer spending any money on Governors Island before this matter is settled. If we appropriate this money to-day the War Department, because the General Staff is opposed to this for the reasons pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COHEN], will rush right in and then use that as an argument against using Governors Island for the very logical purpose that God intended it should be used for—and you can not go any higher than that. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CHINDBLOM). Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I admit the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 79, line 7, after the word "Treasury," strike out the period and add the following: "Provided, That none of the money herein appropriated shall be used for erection of barracks or other buildings at Fort Jay, Governors Island."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, that would simply defer the spending of any money for the moment. This is a deficiency bill. The regular appropriation bill will come in in a few days, and in the meantime we will get our case before the Committee on Military Affairs, and that is the logical proper manner in which to treat this case, first, defer it, and then determine whether we shall spend the money.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the House will vote down the amendment. There is no justification for it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fort Mills, Corregidor, P. I., central power plant: For completing repairs to steam plant and changing the present coal plant to oil, construction of facilities to house Diesel engines and oil storage, purchase and installation of three Diesel units in the central power plant, and all other necessary expenses incidental thereto, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $309,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, after line 20, insert as new paragraphs the following:

"Ordnance service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $121,476.

"Repairs of arsenals: For repairs and improvements of arsenals and depots, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $100,000."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, these amendments are merely companion amendments to the amendment which was adopted. The committee adopted an amendment of $578,110. These two amendments are $121,476 and $85,000, making a total of $784,506, being the amount we told you it would take to move this ammunition from Curtis Bay. You understand the money is expended by different departments of the Army. The $578,000 is expended by the Army transportation, and the other by the Ordnance Department, being the Gambrill amendment as adopted. These amendments aggregate $784,586 which we have asked you for the purpose of removing this ammunition. Now it is necessary for us to have these two amendments in order to carry into effect the first amendment which we have already adopted. They are merely companion amendments to the first.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will vote these amendments down. I am not going to make a speech. The same thing applies to the one previously adopted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SNELL). The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Division.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were—ayes 57, noes 82.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers [Mr. MADDEN and Mr. LINTHICUM] reported that there were—ayes 69, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Headstones for graves of American soldiers in Europe: To complete the furnishing and erecting of headstones for the graves of American soldiers in Europe, $186,000, to remain available until June 30, 1929: Provided, That the headstones furnished hereunder shall be of such design and material as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the American Battle Monuments Commission.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he can inform the committee whether this is to buy Carrara marble in Italy with the money appropriated?

Mr. MADDEN. That has already been spent.

Mr. FISH. No.

Mr. MADDEN. This is to complete the work, and I think it is all Carrara marble.

Mr. FISH. Has the gentleman any information that the committee in charge, the Battle Monuments Commission, has agreed to buy Carrara marble?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I have not.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is probably aware that a good many women's organizations are opposed to buying Carrara marble for headstones, and I am trying to find out whether any definite action has been taken?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman on the committee, who I think has that information.

Mr. MADDEN. I have the information. General Cheatham said in the last session of Congress:

General CHEATHAM. Congress gave us $548,550 some time ago to put the headstones in European cemeteries. That estimate was based upon a slab type of marker. The Battle Monuments Commission, and finally Congress, authorized a stone cross. We find that the stone cross costs a little more than the slab, and therefore the $548,000 was not enough to complete it. We have let a contract for 14,186 of those crosses, at a cost of approximately $23, installed, including all costs for foundation and erection. We feel that this work should be completed. We have enough money left of the $548,000 to make a second contract, but not enough to complete the entire number of 31,000 graves. This $186,000 that is asked for here will enable us to buy, erect, inspect, and, finally, clear up the entire situation in France and England, and do it promptly.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman does not know how many gravestones have been already erected and out of what material?

Mr. MADDEN. They have contracted for fourteen thousand a hundred and some odd.

Mr. FISH. Have they erected any as yet?

Mr. MADDEN. We do not know.

Mr. FISH. And out of what material?

Mr. MADDEN. Carrara marble.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can throw some light on this subject. I have just been furnished with the following information by the Quartermaster General of the Army. The Quartermaster General has already contracted for 22,686 markers out of the 31,200 required, and those at a cost actually erected upon graves in the cemeteries in France of about $20 each.

These markers are of Carrara marble. It is estimated that there are about 8,500 still to be contracted for. The cost of the Carrara marble crosses procured from Italy, as against the cost of granite crosses procured from this country, was, as I am informed, about three or four times in favor of the Carrara marble. The lowest actual bids received for American granite crosses erected were $82 for stone from Concord, N. H., and $119 for stone from Barre, Vt. The marble crosses from this country would have cost $40 per cross. At the present time 6,309 crosses have actually been erected, divided as follows:

At Suresnes	1,455
At Meuse-Argonne	2,474
At St. Mihiel	2,380

In addition to those actually erected 3,395 have been manufactured and accepted and are now in process of erection in the eight cemeteries in France, Belgium, and England. At Suresnes about two-thirds of the total markers had been erected when I visited this cemetery last September when I was over there with the American Legion.

Concerning the use of Carrara marble, I am informed that the kind of material to be used was exhaustively studied by the War Department before final decision, and I shall include in my remarks a letter from General Pershing, chairman of the Battle Monuments Commission, on this subject to the Secretary of War, with a copy of which I have been furnished by the Quartermaster General. From this letter the reasons which led to the decision of the commission will fully appear:

THE AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION,

Washington, June 6, 1926

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR,

War Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The American Battle Monuments Commission at its recent meeting discussed at great length the type of stone which should be used for the headstones in the American military cemeteries in Europe. I have been asked to communicate to you the results of this discussion and present the various considerations which entered into the commission's decision.

For over two years the question of material for these headstones has been the subject of many conferences and much correspondence by the commission with organizations and individuals who are interested in the matter from one standpoint or another. The commission has made an exhaustive investigation of European stone and has given the American stone producers ample opportunity to present to the commission such information as they desired. At this meeting representatives of the American granite industry were heard, and Mrs. Bentley, a member of the commission, presented the views of the Gold Star organizations.

As a result of this study and investigation, the commission approached the subject for a final decision with the following ideas in mind:

(a) That the most suitable material should be used regardless of cost.

(b) That the durability of the stone beyond a period of 30 or 40 years was secondary in importance to that of appearance. The reason for this is that these cemeteries are under constant care and supervision and that the headstones can be and will be replaced whenever necessary.

(c) That if other considerations were at all equal, American stone should be used.

(d) That certain types of white French stone and Carrara marble would give as beautiful a result as any white American stone.

(e) That these headstones should be erected as soon as possible.

Examining the list of bids it is seen that French stone and Carrara marble are much the cheapest in price. If the ones bid on are good representatives of their class, they are entirely suitable in appearance and durability. The use of one of these stones will make for speed in erection, as they can be procured without the delay incident to obtaining an additional appropriation. In other words, in the opinion of the commission, these stones are entirely suitable and the advantages in using them entirely outweigh any objection which might be raised that they do not come from this country.

In view of the above, the commission has asked me to inform you that it votes in favor of using either a French stone or Carrara marble for these headstones and that it would like an opportunity, if you agree with this decision, to select from among these when the full-sized models, required by the specifications under which the bids were made, are received.

I have the honor to remain, respectfully,

JOHN J. PERSHING, Chairman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I happened for a little while to be a member of the commission, but this question had been dealt with before I became a member. However, I think that in order to have the record here complete, this should be stated; at least this is my recollection of what caused the real determination of the material to be used. It was fundamentally a question of color. The commission was of the opinion that these crosses should be of white material. It was impossible to get granite that would meet the idea of color which the commission had, and hence for that reason marble was adopted.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I do not think the gentleman was on the board at that time. I appeared before that board, with others, in favor of granite, and it was shown there that it was quite serviceable, and apparently at that time the argument made seemed to be based on this theory. I think the argument is still sound that Carrara marble is not suitable, on account of its soft texture and liability to wear, for such decoration. We were assured that the granite would be permanent. The committee made that statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, I may be in error, but the impression that I gained from the discussion which took place in the commission after I had become a member—the matter came up in an incidental way—it had already been determined before I became a member; but as I recall the discussion it was a question of color. That was the thing that determined the selection. However, the gentleman from Massachusetts may be correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS

Cape Cod Canal: For the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal and other property pertaining thereto, in accordance with section 2 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1927, $5,500,000, to remain available until June 30, 1929.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been read yet.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: Page 85, after line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows: "Harbor reimbursement: To pay the city of Miami for part reimbursement of the $1,605,000 advanced or loaned to the Government by said city for the improvement of Miami Harbor, as provided under the rivers and harbors act, passed March 3, 1925, in accordance with House Document 516, the sum of $500,000."

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, last February I appeared before the committee when this bill was up and presented this item to the subcommittee. On February 26, 1927, I briefly argued the matter before the Committee of the Whole.

Now, briefly, I will state the facts in this case. On September 15, 1927, I wrote letters to the Chief of Engineers and Mr. MADDEN, which I ask to be incorporated in my remarks:

(Personal)

KISSIMMEE, FLA., September 15, 1927.

Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MADDEN: I am herein inclosing you a copy of a letter I have just written to General Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, relative to an additional refund of the money advanced to the Government by the city of Miami for work on Miami Harbor.

Miami is up against it good and hard, and I certainly trust an additional refund can be made to the city. I understand several additional bonds which the city sold to make the advance to the Government will come due soon, and the city will suffer a great loss unless a refund, as stated in my letter to General Jadwin, is made at the earliest possible moment. I dislike to write this kind of a letter, and I feel I can say for Miami and the State that they join me in the above, but circumstances over which they had no control makes it imperative.

If you feel you can write General Jadwin, suggesting if it is possible for him to do so, that he make an additional refund to the city of Miami, I assure you myself and the citizens of Dade County will greatly appreciate it.

I sincerely trust your health is better and that you have had a pleasant vacation. I am kept on the go, because so many people from Illinois and other States have moved down. However, I have enjoyed being home and mingling with my constituents and finding out their needs.

With kind regards, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

W. J. SEARS, M. C.

(Personal)

KISSIMMEE, FLA., September 15, 1927.

Maj. Gen. EDGAR JADWIN,

Chief of Engineers, War Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GENERAL JADWIN: From an Associated Press dispatch I understand there is approximately a $2,000,000 surplus from the rivers and harbors bill. I saw this in connection with an effort to have this amount transferred to the flood-control appropriation, but General McCarl ruled that this could not be done. I am for giving every relief possible to the flood sufferers and shall work with this end in view at the next session.

Miami was hard hit by the hurricane, and unless an additional $500,000, or at least $300,000, of the money advanced to the Government by the city for work on Miami Harbor is refunded to the city, frankly I don't know what they will do. It is true the work has been rapidly pushed, because Miami advanced the money, but it is also equally true that Miami would not ask for one cent refund until the Government saw proper to make same if the city's loss had not been so severe, due to the hurricane. They have struggled on, but frankly I don't know how they can manage it unless the Board of Engineers makes an additional refund, for I understand several additional bonds which the city sold to make the advance to the Government are coming due soon.

Certainly with a surplus of more than $600,000,000 in the United States Treasury and, if the Associated Press dispatch was correct, an additional two million or more surplus from the rivers and harbors bill, the good citizens of Dade County should not be made to suffer a financial loss due entirely to an act of Providence and no fault of their own.

You have been more than courteous to me and I know you will give this matter your usual prompt consideration. Congressman MADDEN, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has also materially assisted me in regard to the work on Miami Harbor, and I am therefore mailing him a copy of this letter, also a copy to the Secretary of War.

I trust you have had at least a short vacation and that you are enjoying good health.

With kind regards, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

W. J. SEARS, M. C.

I have thanked my colleague [Mr. MADDEN] for his cooperation in securing a refund last year, and now want to thank him publicly. I received a letter from the Chief of Engineers, under date of September 24, 1927, and one from the Secretary of War, under date of September 28, 1927, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington, September 28, 1927.

Hon. W. J. SEARS,

Representative in Congress, Kissimmee, Fla.

MY DEAR MR. SEARS: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 15th instant, inclosing a copy of your letter to the Chief of Engineers of same date, in regard to another refund from the current appropriation for river and harbor improvement of money advanced by the city of Miami, under the provisions of section 11, river and harbor act of March 3, 1925.

There is no surplus of river and harbor funds. The unallotted balance of the $50,000, appropriated by the act of February 23, 1927, for improvement of rivers and harbors, is only sufficient to meet the contingencies incident to the work of the department during the remainder of the present fiscal year. Allotment from river and harbor funds to meet the emergency on the Lower Mississippi has been made with the expectation that it will be repaid from a special appropriation by Congress early in the next session.

While the hardship imposed on the city of Miami by the hurricane last year is appreciated fully, I regret to state that under the circumstances set forth above I am not in a position at this time to approve an additional allotment for Miami Harbor.

Very truly yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, September 24, 1927.

Hon. W. J. SEARS,
Representative in Congress, Kissimmee, Fla.

MY DEAR MR. SEARS: 1. The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of September 15 in regard to another refund from the current appropriation for river and harbor improvement of money advanced by the city of Miami under the provisions of section 11, river and harbor act of March 3, 1925.

2. There is no surplus of river and harbor funds. The unallotted balance of the $50,000,000, appropriated by the act of February 23, 1927, for improvement of rivers and harbors, is only sufficient to meet the contingencies incident to the work of the department during the remainder of the present fiscal year. Allotment from river and harbor funds to meet the emergency on the lower Mississippi has been made with the expectation that it will be repaid from a special appropriation by Congress early in the next session.

3. While the hardship imposed on the city of Miami by the hurricane last year is appreciated fully, I regret to state that under the circumstances set forth above I am not in a position at this time to recommend an additional allotment for Miami Harbor.

Very truly yours,

EDGAR JADWIN,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

The river and harbor act of March 3, 1925, page 14, provides:

SEC. 11. That whenever local interests shall offer to advance funds for the prosecution of a work of river and harbor improvement duly adopted and authorized by law the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, receive such funds and expend the same in the immediate prosecution of such work. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to repay without interest, from appropriations which may be provided by Congress for river and harbor improvements, the moneys so contributed and expended: Provided, That no repayment of funds which may be contributed for the purpose of meeting any conditions of local cooperation imposed by Congress, nor under the authority of section 4 of the river and harbor act, approved March 4, 1915, shall be made.

In January, 1926, the city of Miami advanced the Government the sum of $550,000. In September, 1926, the city of Miami made an additional advance in the sum of $1,105,000 in compliance with the section which I have just read. Immediately after the city of Miami had deposited this sum of $1,655,000 a hurricane struck Florida.

Some of the streets of Miami were buried about 3 feet deep in sand, trees and telephone poles were blown down, and there was a loss of about $78,000,000 worth of property in that section of the State. They would not be asking you now to make a refund if it had not been for their severe loss. Under the laws in our State cities are limited as to their taxing power. We are not asking you for one cent. We are simply asking you to refund us, at perhaps an earlier date than you would, that to which we are entitled and which you are morally bound to refund at some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the city of Miami was very happy indeed to get the cooperation of the War Department in the work that the War Department did for the city and to advance money for the work when the War Department did not have the money. They have been getting their money back under the agreement, and they will continue to get it back. There ought not to be any pressure brought here to get this money now, and this is not the way to do it. They have an agreement with the War Department under which the money is to be paid back to the city of Miami out of river and harbor appropriations. That is where it ought to be paid from and we ought not to create a special fund now to meet that obligation. The obligation will be met. It has been met partly, and it will be met wholly under the conditions that were provided when the money was advanced. Why does the gentleman insist on offering an amendment providing for the payment of the money back out of its regular order?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I tried to make myself perfectly clear.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman did.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. We would not be asking for it if it had not been for the unfortunate hurricane which struck us.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows I have done everything I could to help him in this matter.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. The Secretary of War says he has no money with which to pay it back.

Mr. MADDEN. He has.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. We are now asking for the return of that money, because we have not the taxes with which to raise it, and it is a question whether we can float those bonds or not.

Mr. MADDEN. There will be another rivers and harbors appropriation in a few months, and out of that, undoubtedly, the city of Miami will get its money. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment, because it is only fair to have it withdrawn. In view of all that has already been done in this matter, I think the gentleman ought to be generous enough to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, appreciating the help my colleague has given me in this matter and knowing that he will carry out his agreement to assist me in every way he can to get this money at an early date I will withdraw my amendment, because I do not wish to embarrass the House.

I only desire to say this: We certainly should be as liberal in dealing with our own people as we have been in dealing with people of foreign countries, especially in view of the fact that Miami is asking for the return of her own money and not asking for one cent from the Government. I want to say further that the Miami harbor and terminals are different from most of the harbors in the country in that Miami spent nearly $3,000,000 of her own money in addition to the advance we are seeking to have refunded in the improvement of the harbor and turning basin.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Emergency flood control, Mississippi River: For reimbursement of the appropriation for "Flood control, Mississippi River," and the appropriation for "Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works," for amounts expended therefrom for emergency work on the lower Mississippi River on account of the flood of 1927, $7,000,000: Provided, That the allotment of funds for the flood of 1927 by the Secretary of War from the appropriation for river and harbor works is hereby approved and validated.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the proviso:

That the allotment of funds for the flood of 1927 by the Secretary of War from the appropriation for river and harbor works is hereby approved and validated.

Withholding that reservation, I desire to make a short statement. It has been claimed that the transfer of these funds by the Secretary of War was an emergency. I maintain that the record of the hearings on this bill indicate that no emergency existed, for the reason that many days and weeks and months elapsed subsequent to the flood in which the President of the United States could have called a special session of Congress to make appropriations and the President should have called Congress in special session. We now have the spectacle of Congress being asked to approve of a direct violation of the Constitution. Section 9 of Article I states:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 107, we find in the President's message, in his reference to prohibition, the following:

This imposes upon the citizenship of the country, and especially on all public officers, not only the duty to enforce but the obligation to observe the sanctions of this constitutional provision and its resulting laws.

I maintain that every part of the Constitution should be enforced, and it is out of place for a high officer of this Government to state with reference to the prohibition act that every citizen and public officer should abide by the constitutional provision and at the same time to deliberately flaunt and violate a constitutional provision which is just as binding, one which should be followed by the American people and public officers just as much as the eighteenth amendment. I do not approve of such a policy.

I am for flood relief. It is a Federal proposition and I shall vote to appropriate all necessary funds from the Federal Treasury for that relief.

A special session of the Congress should have been called to take care of the emergency after the waters of the Mississippi had gone on a rampage. If such session were called the expenditure in violation of the Constitution which we are now asked to validate and legalize would not have been made, as Congress could legally have made this appropriation in conformity with constitutional provisions and any other appropriations found necessary by reason of the emergency.

I do not entirely agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois on the Bill Thompson manner of flood relief, which includes diverting water from Lake Michigan and emptying that water with sewerage into the Mississippi and its tributaries, thereby being a contributing factor in adding to the rush of waters which caused this flood disaster. However, I will not force my point of order at this time, although I know it would be upheld, because of my high regard for the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who has reported this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the recent floods were the most disastrous and covered a greater area than any we have had within the memory of those now living and perhaps for a century. They have emphasized the necessity for comprehensive legislation. We have recently witnessed an appalling destruction of life, the submerging of a large number of the cities and towns, the inundation of millions of acres of productive land, the destruction of innumerable railroad and highway bridges, and a loss of property approximating a billion dollars which we do not now have sufficient data to estimate. In addition to the loss of life thousands have been rendered homeless who must be cared for through Federal and State aid, the Red Cross, and other charitable and local organizations. Some of the damage to property may be repaired, but permanent damage has been done to a very large acreage of productive bottom lands by the destruction of fertile soil and by erosion along the banks of the rivers.

In my own State of Oklahoma the engineer for our State drainage board reports to its chairman, after a most careful survey, the following estimate of the area flooded and the damage done to property as follows:

"This brings the total flooded area of all the streams in Oklahoma to 782,300 acres. It is safe to say that the floods in Oklahoma cause an annual loss to the landowners of some ten to fifteen million dollars. Besides, the loss to the State, counties, railroads, and other public utilities possibly is equal to five to ten million dollars annually."

This report is very conservative. It gives the flooded area on each stream, showing a total of 782,300 acres flooded in the aggregate. The estimated annual damage to property of approximately $25,000,000 is the carefully estimated annual loss; and when we add to these figures the permanent loss to land and other property described in the report, reaching perhaps as much more, we are startled with the fact that the annual loss to property in one State alone will equal the average amount that the Congress has authorized to be expended annually on rivers and habors for the entire Nation.

We have been attempting incomplete, if not ineffective remedies since the beginning of the Government. From year to year appropriations are made and expended through the direction of Army engineers. In 1879 the Mississippi River Commission was created. Since that time large sums of money have been expended upon levees along the lower reaches of the Mississippi River. In normal times these levees are sufficient, but they fail to protect life and property during unusual disastrous floods such as occurred recently. Before the creation of the Budget Committee the Rivers and Harbors Committee had jurisdiction of initiating and reporting the appropriations for river and harbor improvements. Then, as now, the money was expended under the direction of Army engineers. In 1916 we assisted in having an item incorporated in the rivers and harbors bill appropriating $235,000 for the improvement of the Arkansas River in Oklahoma and Arkansas. Not a dollar was spent in the State of Oklahoma. Since then no additional sums for the Arkansas River in Oklahoma, except for surveys, have been appropriated.

The Arkansas River is approximately 1,460 miles long. Rising in the State of Colorado it flows through the States of Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas and empties into the Mississippi River. There is no more fertile valley in the United States and its development during the past few years has been phenomenal. The illuminating report of Maj. A. B. Putnam, Corps of Engineers, dated March 24, 1915, reviews at length the history of the legislation and appropriations for the improvement of the Arkansas River since the first congressional appropriation approved July 3, 1832. By the act of March 3, 1879, Congress extended the improvement of the river to Wichita, Kans. This report urges that this improvement should not be abandoned and succinctly sets forth the commercial importance of the great stretch of country through which this river and its major tributaries flow. The money expended upon this river up to June 30, 1914, amounts to $3,243,650.91. During the past few years the importance of the Arkansas River has been greatly underestimated although the development of the valley through which it flows and the contiguous country has been marvelous.

We believe that the recent floods have taught us the necessity for a change in our legislative policy toward flood control. In the first place, let me say that in my judgment the question of river improvement and flood control is a national problem and the larger part of the expense, if not all, should be borne by the Federal Government. In the second place, our legislation should comprehend and define the permanent policy of the Government in a plan carefully thought out, which could be worked together by the Federal and State Governments and local communities all cooperating together. We believe that the recent floods show the futility of depending upon the levee system alone. Our first duty, of course, is to take care of the distressed, the widows and orphans and to alleviate their suffering and the Federal Government should be more than generous in that regard. We must not weigh the loss of life and place the human equation in the same balance as against property loss. That having been cared for as an emergency measure, our attention should be turned to the permanent plan of improvement. We should, of course, repair and strengthen the levee system. Additional spillways should be provided for. The larger streams should be revetted, snagged, dredged, and deepened. In addition, we insist that reservoirs should be established upon the upper reaches of the Arkansas River and each of its larger tributaries where, in the event of menacing floods, the waters may be impounded in sufficient quantities to be withheld so that they will not pour with torrential force down the several tributaries into the Arkansas, then into the Mississippi River, where they can not be controlled. These impounded waters should be released gradually for the benefit of irrigation and navigation, and the power that could be generated from the dams constructed utilized for the benefit of municipal and industrial purposes in the several communities and States. Following 1832 there was some navigation on the Arkansas River as far up as Wichita. Since then the forests along its banks and of its principal tributaries have been cut and removed and the land placed in cultivation up to their very brink, and when we have excessive rains resulting floods then carry into the streams and finally into the Arkansas River vast quantities of alluvial soil, sand, silt, and gravel, filling up the channel of the river, rendering it useless for navigation. When the banks of these streams are reforested and the main body of the Arkansas River snagged, dredged, deepened, and its banks revetted, and the waters at strategical points impounded, these disastrous floods can measurably be prevented, and the banks protected from erosion so that the channels would not be filled with silt and sand, but would be kept open and the impounded water gradually released to maintain navigation. This would permit large areas of fertile lands to be drained and reclaimed for productive purposes and the owners encouraged to permanently improve these lands with the assurance that the disastrous floods, which from year to year have swept their homes and livestock and growing crops away, would not again recur.

The impounded waters could be released in the West to make productive large areas of semiarid lands in western Oklahoma and Kansas. What is true of the Arkansas River is also true of the Missouri and the other large tributaries of the Mississippi. The power generated could be used for municipal and industrial purposes, which would induce the location of factories of various kinds to utilize the raw material produced in our western country. The navigation of the Arkansas River as far north as Wichita would result not only in water transportation for the bulky haul but in the lowering of freight rates, so vital to the prosperity of the Middle West. With cheaper freight rates the development of our western country would be unparalleled and the population of our cities and towns doubled within the next decade. We should not only have the imagination to vision the future but the courage to make those dreams come true.

Congress should lead the way in the enactment of legislation in which the several States affected should join, so that the Federal Government and the various State governments and local communities could cooperate in this great constructive improvement. The policy should be permanent and definite to insure the confidence of all that it will not be abandoned but energetically carried through to a successful completion.

To the extent that expenditures are made in aid of navigation, including dredging, snagging, revetment work, reforestation, flood control, and the building of reservoirs, that should be regarded as a national problem and borne by the Federal Government, with the municipalities, drainage districts, local communities, and individuals either contributing their equitable share toward expenditures for irrigation, water power, and other benefits utilized by municipalities or individuals for local or personal purposes, or compensating the Government to the extent of the benefits derived. If a conflict of jurisdiction should arise between any State and the Federal Government over nonnavigable tributaries, an amicable adjustment can be negotiated and ratified by State and Federal enactments.

The entire West, including my State of Oklahoma, and particularly my district, which is traversed by the Arkansas River, is vitally affected by flood-control legislation. The Arkansas River has many major tributaries, including the Illinois, Grand, Verdigris, Cimarron, Deep Fork, Canadian, and a number of other tributaries, which do frightful damage to farm lands, cities, homes, roads, and bridges.

Appreciating this, a flood-control conference was held in my State at Tulsa, Okla., on July 14 and 15, 1927, which was largely attended by governors, Members of Congress, representatives of the departments, engineers, and members of drainage boards who have given much thought to this important question in an effort to stimulate interest and assist in finding a proper solution.

We need the hearty cooperation and enthusiastic support of the governors of the several States affected, their drainage boards, the members of the legislatures, and the people generally. The chambers of commerce have been invited, and many of them have availed themselves of the opportunity to send representatives here, because they appreciate that every city throughout the entire country is vitally affected by flood-control legislation.

The press of the country is giving detailed study to this important question and has done much to arouse public opinion as to the necessity for the enactment of proper legislation. We need the earnest, hearty cooperation of everyone interested in the development of our matchless country if we are to succeed.

Legislation for flood control of the Arkansas and Missouri Rivers and their tributaries has been introduced in Congress, and numerous hearings have been had upon it. The delegations representing the Western States have repeatedly appeared before the Flood Control and the Rivers and Harbors Committees and urged legislation, not only for the deepening of harbors and the navigation of the larger streams but for a survey of the Arkansas and Missouri Rivers and their larger tributaries with the view of establishing reservoirs to aid in flood control. Detailed data must be secured. State organizations and chambers of commerce can be of great service in securing and furnishing data to be looked over and analyzed and submitted in our efforts to secure necessary legislation. Much of this data has been collected and presented to the committee. Other details, of course, will have to be worked out. Suggestions as to the locations of reservoirs should be made, preliminary estimates as to costs of surveys and improvements, present and potential tonnage collected and estimated. All of this data will be helpful. We must have the assistance of all those vitally interested.

The building of railroads develops tonnage. The improvement of the Arkansas River should canalize its bed and develop a wonderful potential tonnage. The valleys along its course and those of its tributaries would be veritable garden spots. The proceeds from products marketed would pour forth golden streams to the enrichment of the commerce of those sections and the Nation.

If the Arkansas River and its tributaries were to receive the legislative assistance to which they are justly entitled, all of the cities within the territory in the near future, stimulated by cheaper freight rates, would be filled with factories and the vast deposits of cheap fuel, such as coal, oil, and gas, utilized and the raw material made into the finished product.

I want to emphasize as vigorously as I may, first, the importance of a comprehensive plan of flood control, and, second, the effect permanent legislation on this subject would have upon the development of the country through which the Arkansas and Missouri Rivers and their major tributaries flow.

We have these great canals already dug, and we have the water flowing on unused to the Gulf. We of the West maintain that it is an economic crime to delay longer the utilization of these canals which nature gave to us and the water with which we are so bountifully blessed.

Of course, it is going to require the expenditure of a large sum of money. Let us not be afraid of the cost. If the money is honestly and efficiently expended, within a few years the development will be so great that we will be astonished that this great constructive improvement was not entered upon years before.

Here is a vast stretch of territory, producing some, of course, but its maximum production can not be realized without legislation along the lines which we have sought to indicate.

We want to reclaim the rich, fertile valleys of these rivers and their major tributaries for productive activities and encourage the farmers making permanent and lasting improvements to be assured that their life work is not going to be swept away by a devastating flood which may come at any time. We want reservoirs established and water impounded and the water gradually released for two purposes, for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions of the West and to maintain the gradual flow of the rivers to be used for navigation purposes. We want the banks reforested so as to protect them from erosion and to keep back the silt and sand from being poured forth into the bed of the streams and preventing navigation.

Great stretches along the main channels and their major tributaries have no protection against being destroyed by erosion. This legislation contemplates that. Again we insist that if these rivers were navigable years ago, that with the proper legislation extended over a period of years, with the assurance that adequate appropriations were to be continued, that these major streams, including the Arkansas, flowing through the State of Oklahoma, would be again made navigable and used for navigation purposes, as it was for a period of 75 years beginning in 1832. We believe that this would greatly aid in solving the question of freight rates. Few great cities are built away from water competition. We ought to have the courage to study this question and enact the proper legislation. We ought to have the vision to look into the future. The people of this Nation would regard the amount of money necessary to carry forward this plan as one of the best investments that the Federal Government ever made. For myself, I have always been a consistent and sincere advocate of the internal development of our great country. The Middle West and the West, and, in fact, the entire interior of our country in this respect has been too long neglected.

Let me again emphasize that the complaints against excessive freight rates will be solved if this comprehensive plan of flood control is enacted. It will bring factories to the interior of our country, along these streams and their tributaries, where cheap water power will be developed. The raw material grown in those sections will be woven into fabrics and utilized at home. It will stimulate the rapid growth and development of the cities and towns.

Let me close by repeating that if we have the courage and vision to enact this legislation to utilize the natural canals and water power, and reclaim these great areas, drained by these rivers and their tributaries, within a decade we will be wondering why those who have preceded had such a short-sighted policy as not to utilize it. If the countries of Europe and if the State of New York and other parts of our country can dig canals and divert the water into them and make them a commercial success, we insist that with the necessary legislation we should be able to use the great natural canals and the water flowing through them with which nature has already provided us. Inadequate appropriations are a waste and should be discouraged. Let us therefore not be afraid to provide all of the funds which may be necessary, safeguarded by legislation, in such a way as to insure that the money will be both efficiently and honestly expended.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have unanimous consent to go back to page 24 to offer an amendment. I offer the amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, after line 26, insert: "Bureau of Animal Industry. Inspection and quarantine: For an additional amount for inspection and quarantine work, including the same objects specified under this head in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, $11,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make just a brief explanation of this amendment. A great many small stockyards throughout the country are unable to get inspection, and as a result they are not able to ship their cattle. This $11,000 will enable them to get the inspection and will last until the 1st of July next. In the annual appropriation bill there is provision made for the future. This takes the place of $25,000 that we reported last year in the deficiency bill, which failed. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 2, line 24, in order to offer an amendment, which is very brief, and then I shall move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 2, after line 24, insert: "For folding speeches and pamphlets at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, fiscal year 1928, $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to occupy a minute. Early this morning I promised the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that we would give the Democrats of the House the Hall at 4.30. I promised the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that we would probably finish the bill to-day, and I promised the gentlemen in favor of elevating the guns and other things that we would hear their case to-day. But we have had a great many gentlemen here who wanted to speak on different subjects, and it has taken more time than we anticipated. We can take this up to-morrow morning.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I do not know whether it would inconvenience anybody greatly, but can not we come in at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

[Cries of "No! no! no!"]

Mr. MADDEN. I think we can get this bill out of the way in an hour and a half to-morrow.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5800, the first deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereof.

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN M'DUFFIE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by my colleague, Hon. JOHN MCDUFFIE, of Alabama, made yesterday before the National River and Harbor Congress in this city.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert a speech of Hon. JOHN MCDUFFIE, member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, before the Rivers and Harbors Congress held in Washington, December 7, 1927, which is as follows:

INLAND WATERWAYS AND UNITED STATES ENGINEERS

Mr. MCDUFFIE. Mr. President, your highness the ambassador from Belgium, ladies, and gentlemen, standing before an audience of waterway advocates I do not presume to impart a great amount of special information nor to give extraordinary advice. It is a great privilege, however, to meet again with the membership of this organization, which for so many years, through its intelligent efforts, has rendered a distinct service to the Nation. Advocating no specific project but embracing a broad and comprehensive policy, the National Rivers and Harbors Congress has played a significant part in educating the public mind to appreciate the value of our inland waterways, not only as commerce carriers but for the stimulation of industrial development, the multiplication of taxable values, and for national defense. Despite the time-worn cry of "pork barrel" attending legislation for the improvement of rivers and harbors of the country; despite selfish efforts to discredit the economic value of our rivers, canals, and connecting waterways, the people of America are more interested in their development to-day than ever before in the Nation's history.

The waterway enthusiasts of the country, amongst whom I count myself, are glad to believe that we have arrived at those conditions in the great scheme of transportation envisaged some 15 years ago by the great empire builder, the late James J. Hill, who with prophetic vision saw and predicted the use of our inland waterways to relieve rail congestion. The inland waterways faded from the transportation picture immediately following the great era of railway construction, but to-day are vividly reappearing. The importance of their development have so impressed the country that we find men in high places, from the President on down, rallying to their support. Mr. Hoover, within the recent past, has said, "If we were to make a survey of the opportunities that lie before us of possible physical progress in our Nation, the development of our inland waterways would stand in the forefront." And Mr. Coolidge himself, who can not be charged with wasteful ideas in public expenditures, with his characteristic New England thrift and economy, has said that "such works are productive of wealth and in the long run tend to a reduction of the tax burden."

In the light of apparent enthusiasm on the part of nearly every one clothed with responsibility in national affairs, it would seem the Government, with all of its vast wealth of more than $300,000,000,000, with a national indebtedness, small and rapidly decreasing, should not hesitate now to appropriate funds sufficient to complete the task of providing immediately a great trunk-line waterway system, treating it as a whole; a great river and connecting canal system throughout the United States, with adequate and standardized depth, in order to meet the public necessity and convenience in the quick dispatch and orderly movement of a rapidly increasing commerce, not only between the various States of the Union, but a tonnage destined for all the busy markets of the world.

It is encouraging to know that executives of great industrial enterprises, those who are manufacturing for world markets such heavy commodities as steel and iron, as well as those engaged in fuel production and in the production of other bulk commodities are already planning for the utilization of a waterway system, using standardized equipment, on which a barge of steel may be loaded at Pittsburgh or Birmingham and unloaded at Mobile, Chicago, New Orleans, Houston, or Corpus Christi, or even at the ports on the Atlantic seaboard, without breaking cargo. The same plans apply to the movement of construction material, grain, cotton, coal, oil, sulphur, and other basic commodities.

The question of cheap transportation will always loom larger than any other to the producer and consumer of the United States. The era of railway construction has passed. It has been authoritatively stated that in the year 1925 approximately 600 miles of rail lines were abandoned in the United States, probably due to the coming of the cement highway and the motor vehicle. Experts advise that the tonnage of the country doubles itself every 12 to 14 years. The Secretary of Commerce stated before the Rivers and Harbors Committee last year that the ton mileage of the rail lines has trebled within the last 30 years. We can reasonably be assured that our population will increase 40,000,000 within the next quarter of a century, and our tonnage will be multiplied many times. Assuming that these statements are correct it follows that we can no longer refuse to meet our waterway problems in a big and businesslike way and complete the job at once, if producer and consumer in America are to have and enjoy the use and benefits of the great God-given arteries of commerce. When the water lines are completed our next step is to see that they are properly coordinated with our railways and highways.

I am not one of those who may have illusions as to the attitude of the rail lines to the speedy development and establishment of the waterways. I am not one of those who would destroy successful operation of the railways in America. I have always felt that among the outstanding figures in the history of this country should be placed the names of such empire builders as Hill, Huntington, Flagler, Stanford, and Plant. Our main-line railroads are to the continuing growth and development of this Nation what the arteries are to the life and growth of the human body. A few of our rail lines have shown some disposition to cooperate with the waterways, but as Commissioner Taylor, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, very aptly said some years ago, "it is as natural for the rail to fight the water as it is for a dog to chase a cat." Until the dawn of that day when the railroads believe themselves wholly incapable of handling the Nation's tonnage, we can not expect them to embrace or welcome into the picture such keen and effective competition already developing and such as will continue to develop on the trunk-line waterways of the country. When these water lines are completed, as must inevitably be done, if our railroads still refuse to cooperate and coordinate the two services for the public good then it is encumbent upon the Congress to force such coordination, if possible, by appropriate and affirmative legislation.

Despite the niggardly, stinting, and, at times, inexcusable manner in which the Congress has treated the problem of developing our rivers and harbors, regardless of those who declare that transportation upon our rivers is a failure, even in their unfinished condition, we moved over the rivers, canals, and connecting channels during the year 1925, 204,- 569,000 tons, valued at approximately $4,000,000,000, while our harbors lifted in round figures 432,000,000 tons of the value of approximately $23,000,000,000. The Mississippi River and its tributaries carried 57,000,000 tons valued at a billion dollars, the Monongahela 24,000,000 tons, and the Tombigbee-Warrior system a million and a half tons, while the Sacramento, on the west coast, carried a vast amount, one and a half million tons of first class and much perishable tonnage with an unusually high value. All this tonnage of great value was moved at a saving many times the amount annually appropriated by Congress for maintenance and new work on all the rivers and harbors of the Nation.

In the face of such a showing, those of us interested in waterway development have a right to complain at the failure of Congress to discharge its responsibilities by refusing adequate appropriation for this purpose. Last year the sum total appropriated for the expenses of all governmental activities amounted to some four billions of dollars, and of this amount 1¼ per cent was expended on the waterways of the country. Two-thirds of the appropriations necessary to maintain the Navy Department for one year would probably complete all existing projects. Of course, we must maintain a Navy, and I believe in a Navy as large as any other navy of the world. I would not subtract from the funds necessary for other departments of the Government, which must be maintained in keeping with high standards of service, but the Congress should respond more readily in the future than it has in the past to bring about the speedy development and early completion of our river system as a whole.

We recall that the Government turned to its waterways in times of war for relief of the rail lines. It is not unreasonable, therefore, to say that river and harbor development is an integral part of our national defense. I take it that no thinking, intelligent citizen denies the necessity for the maintenance of a modern, well-equipped merchant marine. The development of our waterways is complementary and correlated with the development of a merchant marine which the people of America are demanding, a merchant fleet operated at least for the immediate future by the Government, in order to properly establish and maintain trade routes to all the markets of the world for the products of our fields and factories.

Many of our inland waterways are capable of producing untold national wealth in the generation of hydroelectric power. In the past we have developed navigation without regard to power, but within recent years we know that the same water that floats the commerce of the country on many of our navigable streams can be utilized to turn countless wheels of industry. We have just entered the electrical age. To-day approximately 60 per cent of the wheels of all the industries of the country are turned by electricity.

No one denies the coming of the day when we will need every horsepower possible to be developed on our water courses. Who knows what the potential water power of the Nation is? Various guesses have been made by Government agencies. It was estimated that on the Tennessee River there was a possible development of 1,900,000 horsepower and probably 28 dam sites. A few years ago the Congress authorized a detailed study and survey of that wonderful stream. The district engineer in charge testified before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors last year that he had found 58 dam sites and more than 3,000,000 horsepower possible to be developed outside of Muscle Shoals. Similar instances might be cited where such a survey would reveal enormous potential power. The last Congress authorized and directed the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, to make surveys of all the navigable streams and their tributaries throughout the country with a view of determining the possible power development, the control of flood hazards and the improvement of navigation, at an estimated cost of approximately $7,000,000, and this work should begin at once. This act of Congress has met with the approval of the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Mississippi Valley Association, the Intracoastal Canal Association, and other organizations, as well as individuals, who appreciate the fact that in the development of our navigable streams we should see to it that wherever water power development appears feasible, every stream should be so developed as to produce the maximum of its power possibilities. Let it be understood that we do not urge the Government to embark in the business of power development on our navigable streams. It is the province of the Government, however, to take stock, as it were, in making these surveys by the Corps of Engineers, the duly constituted authority to deal with this problem, and see that dam sites are planted on streams in such a manner as to develop the maximum power of the stream as a unit or a whole. May I express the hope that this organization will lend its indorsement to this act of Congress for the conservation of the Nation's power resources and give expression of its views to the country by appropriate resolutions.

The proprieties of this occasion will certainly not be violated by directing your attention to the renewed activities of those interests and individuals who by legislative enactment would destroy the jurisdiction and functions of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army in their relation to river and harbor development. H. R. 17250 of the Sixty-ninth Congress proposed to create a department of public works and domain, supplanting the Interior Department and transferring to the new department the Bureau of Roads, the Office of the Supervising Architect, the road commissioners of Alaska, and Office of Public Buildings and Parks of the Capital, the Inland Waterways Corporation, and the river and harbor improvement, including the board of engineers, the duties of the Chief of Engineers and all other engineering construction work, including all jurisdiction in respect to navigable waters. Under the guise of simplifying and coordinating the functions of the Federal Government in its public works, the proponents of this measure, which I am glad to say has not yet received serious consideration on the part of any committee of Congress, would destroy the usefulness as well as the important peace-time functions of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. As an organization the United States Engineers have a record of more than a century of real service, unrivaled and unexcelled by any other one of the countless boards, bureaus, or commissions maintained at the expense of the Public Treasury. Far removed from politics, with no selfish ambitions to serve, striving at all times to reach a goal of patriotic service well performed, answerable only to their conscience and the flag of their country, both in peace and war the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army has written a record of service and achievement of which the American people are justly proud.

The American Government has already drifted rapidly into a vast bureaucracy. Many people are justly alarmed over the top-heavy system of Government we are building up by the creation of hundreds of bureaus, boards, and commissions. And yet there are those who would intensify the situation by the creation of additional governmental agencies to be clothed with more authority and less responsibility. The establishment of a department in accordance with the terms of the bill would not improve the service to be performed by the United States Engineer, but would handicap and destroy his efficiency. In the name of economy it would serve only to add to the taxpayers' burden. Instead of being removed from political consideration as it is to-day, the Engineer Corps, with all of its high duties and patriotic purposes, would be plunged into a whirlpool of partisan politics. Instead of men selected in their youth because of their mental, physical, and moral qualifications from the top of their classes at the West Point Military Academy and other first-class colleges of technology throughout the country, we might have, under the terms of this bill, a personnel to supervise and direct our river and harbor development, selected to meet the will or political whims and inclinations of an assistant secretary of the department of public works and domain. Many reforms are doubtless necessary in the various functions of the Federal Government, but they are needed less, if at all, in our plans for the selection of men to deal with our waterway problems than anywhere else in the entire governmental structure. No organization ever existed that was more zealous in maintaining the good name, the integrity, the efficiency, and fidelity of its membership than the Corps of Engineers. No branch of the Army service is more important in times of war than the Corps of Engineers. No training during peace times is more advantageous than the practical experience of supervising a work involving the mastery and control of our great rivers, the building of railroads and bridges, the digging of canals and great harbors. Regardless of the honesty of purpose of those who advocate such a measure, they are not only striking a blow at our national defense but would add to the cost of Government and the taxpayers' burden. Congress, as well as this organization, should frown upon any movement that might endanger the efficiency and high character of the service performed by the Corps of Engineers. Of course mistakes have been made, and I do not claim that the Engineer Corps has a monopoly on the engineering brains and integrity of the Nation. There are hundreds and thousands of men of the highest type engaged in civilian engineering, yet I challenge all records everywhere to find a better type of men, taken as a whole, than those composing the Engineer Corps of the United States Army.

In the Sixty-ninth Congress there were presented many so-called relief measures. In a Government like ours we have always had, and will continue to have, great organizations and class interests and sometimes selfish interests, constantly knocking at the doors of Congress, under the guise of patriotic motives, clamoring for the enactment of legislation designed to confer special favors and extraordinary privileges. In a Nation claimed to be the wealthiest on earth the demands for relief of various kinds were never so numerous. Despite our vast wealth, everybody seemed to need some sort of relief. There were proposals for farm relief, coal relief, and oil relief. Regardless of the fact that the contractors of America do approximately 99 per cent of the public construction and probably 60 per cent to 75 per cent of the construction paid for by the Public Treasury, we had another interesting proposal which might have been properly styled "A bill for the contractors' relief." The President very aptly said in a recent address: "Those who laid the foundations here for the greatest government in the world tried to see how much they could put into it, while to-day many people are trying to find out how much they can get out of it."

The Campbell bill was sponsored by the Association of General Contractors of America, with representatives in 45 States—I do not know why there are three States missing—under the management of a very genial and distinguished gentleman, Gen. R. C. Marshall, a high officer of the United States Army during the World War. This bill had serious consideration by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, and after being very materially changed was reported to the House. Accompanying the report of the committee was a minority report presented by my colleague from Alabama, Congressman BOWLING, and signed by Congressmen TILLMAN, of Arkansas, and WEAVER, of North Carolina. I commend to your careful reading the very sound views in this minority report showing the dangers of such legislation.

While the bill is apparently drawn to affect the expenditures of funds of all construction work of the Federal Government, the hearings disclosed that the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army were the chief offenders in the eyes of the Associated General Contractors of America. It is estimated that approximately $2,000,000,000 are expended throughout the whole country for public construction by the States and the Federal Government. Since more than half the work supervised by the Corps of Engineers is done by contract, the fact is they expend by the use of day labor directly through the Government agency itself a sum of money that is hardly more than 1 per cent of the sum expended for all public construction. And yet a casual reading of the hearings would lead one to believe that the work of the engineers is destructive of sound governmental policies and that the United States engineer, more than anyone else, is encouraging and committing the Government to a policy of bringing the Public Treasury into competition with private enterprise.

It is not my purpose to impugn the motives of anyone. Belonging to that school of thought which believes the Government should not destroy initiative and individual enterprise by competing with private capital in any business, I can appreciate the attitude of those who are honestly urging the enactment of legislation seeking to restrain the strong arm of the Government, as much as possible, from using its own agencies and equipment with the hire of day labor in the field of public construction. It is difficult, however, if we are to proceed with due care for the purse strings of the Treasury, to say where the line shall be drawn. Doubtless many good citizens believe in the principles underlying the Campbell bill, but under the terms of that bill as originally presented the way was open for the contractors to fix their own prices for doing approximately 90 per cent of all the construction work of the Federal Government. To make assurance doubly sure and to tie the hands of the Government so that it could not come back into the field without a vast expenditure of public money, one section of the bill provided that the equipment now owned by the Government, valued at some fifty-five or sixty millions of dollars, should be turned over to the contractors at a reasonable rental, and the surplus equipment not so leased should be sold through competitive bidding. As a matter of fact, this provision was carried in the amended bill as reported from the committee. Another section of the bill provided that anyone who violated any provision of the act should be summarily removed from office. Of the 22 persons appearing in favor of the bill, 20 were contractors, 1 was a Member of the House, and 1 more whose interest did not appear in the hearings.

It is readily seen, therefore, that the public generally was not aroused in seeking the passage of such legislation. On the other hand, if the public generally understood the effect of such legislation there would have been in addition to the strong opposition from the Navy Department, the War Department, the Department of the Interior, and Members of both Houses of Congress many protests from every section of the country. Complaint was made by proponents of the measure of the fact that the Government had invested a large sum in equipment. In the first place there is no desire on the part of the Corps of Engineers to increase its equipment beyond the amount absolutely necessary to properly carry out its functions. In the second place there are certain types of work done by the Engineers in which contractors are not interested and on which they do not care to bid. In the third place the Engineer Corps must always be prepared for emergencies. It would be folly to say that when a levee breaks or a dam gives way or a channel is filled by silt or wreck to require advertising and to await the offering of bids to take care of such an emergency while navigation must be impeded and probably life and property destroyed. Let me remind you that many a man, woman, and child is living to-day to tell the tale of the Mississippi flood by reason of the fact that assistance in the way of equipment and provisions and life-saving devices were provided by the Engineer Corps of the United States Army. Surely the human lives saved through the agencies of the Engineer Corps are worth more than the money invested in all their equipment. It is refreshing to know that the people of the country, best advised about the Mississippi River and its flood hazards, seem willing to turn to the Corps of Engineers to find the best methods of preventing a recurrence of such a disaster on the Mississippi River.

Again, if we follow out the theory of the proponents of the Campbell bill to its conclusion, why not let a contract for many of the functions now performed by the Coast Guard; why not let by contract the care of the disabled ex-service men in the hospitals of the Veterans' Bureau; or why not let by contract the care of those afflicted by mental diseases at St. Elizabeths Hospital? Why not let a contract for the Lighthouse Service or the operation of our marine hospitals throughout the country, or our quarantine stations? There are certain functions of a great Government like ours which must be performed through Government agencies themselves. This holds true in much of the work now being done through the Corps of Engineers. There is no marked increase in the amount of work done by hired labor, nor is there likely to be. As a matter of fact much equipment authorized by the Congress to be purchased by the Corps of Engineers was never purchased because of their efforts not to compete with private enterprise and in an effort to conserve the public funds. If the limitations of this hour permitted, instances might be cited wherein it was impossible to let river and harbor work by contract. In some instances there were no bidders, while in other instances the records show that the bids from all sources were so high it was impossible to have the work done by contract. In the last analysis there exists no need for the Campbell bill even though I understand its proponents will renew their activities in the present Congress. Legislation adequate to protect the principle advocated by the proponents of this bill is already written into law. Therefore let us not handicap the work which is so important to the Nation's commerce and to its progress and development, as well as to its national defense, by the passage of legislation which, regardless of the motives of those behind it, will create a condition under which those common elements of human nature will inevitably come into play, bringing about the possibility of a general understanding amongst the general contractors of the country, who could absolutely fix the price to be paid from the Public Treasury for all of its public construction. Instead of such legislation let us appropriate sufficient funds and place them in the hands of the Corps of Engineers so that they may quickly complete for this Nation the most magnificent system of inland waterways in all the world.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to change the reference of the bill (H. R. 48) to erect a tablet or marker to the memory of the Federal soldiers who were killed at the Battle of Perryville, and for other purposes, from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on the Library. Both chairmen have consented to the change.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Library had hearings on it last session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the Chair thinks it properly belongs to the Committee on the Library?

The SPEAKER. It does.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 44) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to execute a lease with air nitrate corporations and American Cyanamide Co., and for other purposes, was erroneously referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. As it deals with Muscle Shoals, it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 9, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

A report showing in detail the travel expenses of certain officers and employees of the department on official business from Washington to points outside the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927; to the Committee on Appropriations.

COMMERCE DEPARTMENT REPORTS

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate certain communications from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a complete set of general rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, Steamboat Inspection Service, at the meeting of January, 1927, which regulations have been approved by the Secretary of Commerce, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill for the relief of James O. Williams, former special disbursing agent, Bureau of the Census, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF POSTMASTER GENERAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two communications from the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to law, the following reports, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

A report of the special contract entered into between the Post Office Department and the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad for carrying the mails on its road between Hudson Terminal Station, New York, N. Y., and Journal Square, Jersey City, N. J.; and

RADIO IN THE SENATE CHAMBER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 197, agreed to May 2, 1924, a report of an investigation in regard to the equipment of the Senate Chamber with electrical transmission and receiving apparatus and for the broadcasting by radio of the proceedings of the Senate; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Rules.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint Resolution 9 A, memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act

Whereas the voters of the State of Wisconsin at a recent referendum registered their disapproval of prohibition by a majority of approximately 176,000 votes; and

Whereas the people of Wisconsin have emphatically expressed themselves in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; and

Whereas a nation-wide test on the question of modifying the Volstead Act would afford the means of accurately measuring the sentiment of the entire country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature hereby goes on record as respectfully memorializing Congress to provide the necessary machinery for the holding of a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution duly attested by the proper officers of the assembly and senate be transmitted to the presiding officers of each House of Congress.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint Resolution 38, memorializing Congress to adopt Senate Concurrent Resolution 15, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, relating to "dollar diplomacy"

Whereas Senate Concurrent Resolution 15 has been introduced in the Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, and

Whereas such resolution provides as follows:

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to direct the Departments of State, Treasury, and Commerce, the Federal Reserve Board, and all other agencies of the Government which are or may be concerned thereunder, to refrain henceforth, without specific prior authorization of the Congress, from—

"(1) Directly or indirectly engaging the responsibility of the Government of the United States, or otherwise on its behalf to supervise the fulfilment of financial arrangements between citizens of the United States and sovereign foreign governments or political subdivisions thereof whether or not recognized de jure or de facto by the United States Government; or

"(2) In any manner whatsoever giving official recognition to any arrangement which may commit the Government of the United States to any form of military intervention in order to compel the observance of alleged obligations of sovereign or subordinate authority, or of any corporations or individuals, or to deal with any such arrangement except to secure the settlement of claims of the United States or of United States citizens through the ordinary channels of law provided therefor in the respective foreign jurisdictions or through duly authorized and accepted arbitration agencies": Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That Congress be and is hereby respectfully petitioned and urged to adopt Senate Concurrent Resolution 15; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Joint Resolution (S. 39) memorializing the National Government to submit to arbitration the Mexican and Nicaraguan controversies

Whereas difficulties have arisen between Mexico and the United States relative to the retroactive and confiscatory provisions of the land laws of Mexico as affecting the claims of certain private citizens of the United States; and

Whereas the attitude of the United States Government toward Mexico and Nicaragua has been in spirit, at least, a violation of the Monroe Doctrine; and

Whereas the President of Mexico has signified his willingness to submit to arbitration the controversies arising out of the land laws of that country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Government of the United States discontinue its present policy of interference in these countries and make every effort to submit the matters in controversy between the United States and the Governments of Mexico and Nicaragua to arbitration; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and each Wisconsin Member thereof.

JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
HENRY A. HUHN,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution of the Lions Club of Thermopolis, Wyo., favoring the passage of measures to prevent the illegal use of narcotic drugs, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following resolutions of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States at Winslow, Ariz., which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARIZONA DEPARTMENT,
RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Winslow, Ariz.

Resolution XI

Whereas plans for the new Veterans' Bureau hospital at Tucson do not provide for the construction of recreation and occupational therapy buildings, garage, medical officers' and attendants' quarters: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Department of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, in annual convention assembled at Flagstaff this 10th day of September, 1927, Do hereby urge the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to make provisions to take care of the omissions outlined above; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Congressman.

M. H. AXLINE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Reserve,
Chairman Resolutions Committee.

ARIZONA DEPARTMENT,
RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Winslow, Ariz.

Resolution X

Whereas it is sincerely felt that hospitalization should be extended to all retired, resigned, and honorably discharged soldiers of the United States Army: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Department, Reserve Officers' Association, in convention assembled at Flagstaff this 10th day of September, 1927, Do hereby urge Congress to enact such legislation as will provide hospitalization to all retired, honorably discharged, or resigned members of the Military Establishment of the United States.

M. H. AXLINE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Reserve,
Chairman Resolutions Committee.

ARIZONA DEPARTMENT,
RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Winslow, Ariz.

Resolution IX

Whereas there is pending before Congress a measure known as the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill for the retirement of World War emergency officers; and

Whereas, if passed, this measure will give to emergency officers the same rights and benefits as those enjoyed by the Regular officers: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Department, Reserve Officers' Association, in convention assembled at Flagstaff this 10th day of September, 1927, That we do hereby request our Congressman and Senators to use their influence in the passage of this act; be it further

Resolved, That copy of this resolution be sent to national headquarters, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, and to the commanding general of the Eighth Corps Area.

M. H. AXLINE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Reserve,
Chairman Resolutions Committee.

ARIZONA DEPARTMENT,
RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Winslow, Ariz.

Resolution VIII

Whereas the present allowance of 4 cents per mile to reserve officers on active duty appears to us to be an unfair discrimination; and

Whereas the present allowance is insufficient to make up to the reserve officers for certain sacrifices which they must make while on such active duty: Therefore be it

Resolved, That representation be made to Congress requesting that the reserve officer on active status be placed upon the same allowance as is the Regular Army officer for like service; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished the Chief of Staff, United States Army, commanding general of the Eighth Corps Area, our Congressman, and Senators.

Passed by the third annual convention of the Arizona department, Reserve Officers' Association of the United States at Flagstaff, Ariz., September 10, 1927.

M. H. AXLINE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Reserve,
Chairman Resolutions Committee.

ARIZONA DEPARTMENT,
RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Winslow, Ariz.

Resolution M

Whereas efforts have been made to decrease the personnel of the Regular Army; and

Whereas the safety of this Nation depends upon a well-organized standing Army: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Department, Reserve Officers' Association, in convention assembled at Flagstaff this 10th day of September, 1927, Do hereby urge the National Congress to increase the Regular Army to the strength as authorized by national defense act; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the commanding general of the Eighth Corps Area and to the Secretary of War, also to our Congressman and Senators.

M. H. AXLINE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Reserve,
Chairman Resolutions Committee.

ARIZONA DEPARTMENT,
RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Winslow, Arizona.

Resolution III

Whereas Congress has not, in the past, provided sufficient funds to train all reserve officers each year; and

Whereas, It is necessary that this training be accorded reserve officers in order to comply with the national defense act: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Department, Reserve Officers' Association, in convention assembled at Flagstaff, Ariz., this 10th day of September, 1927, Do hereby request and urge Congress to appropriate an additional amount sufficient to train all reserve officers each year, regardless of mileage expense; be it further

Resolved, That copy of this resolution be sent to the commanding general of the Eighth Corps Area, to the Secretary of War, and to our Congressman and Senators.

M. H. AXLINE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Reserve,
Chairman Resolutions Committee.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following resolutions of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Arizona, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

(House of representatives, eighth State legislature, fourth special session)

House Resolution No. 4

Whereas there were nine classes of officers who fought for the United States in the World War, to wit, the officers of the Army: Emergency, provisional, regular; Navy: Emergency, provisional, regular; Marine: Emergency, provisional, regular; and

Whereas of the nine named classes of officers eight classes, to wit, the officers of the Army: * * * provisional, regular; Navy: Emergency, provisional, regular; Marine: Emergency, provisional, regular, who became disabled in line of duty to the extent that they were incapacitated for further active service, have been for the past seven years, under laws passed by Congress, retired on 75 per cent of their active-duty pay on account of such disability; and

Whereas the ninth class of such officers, to wit, the emergency Army officers, who became disabled in line of duty to the extent that they were incapacitated for further active service, have been, for the past seven years, denied by Congress the retirement privileges which long ago were accorded the other eight classes of disabled officers; and

Whereas the American Legion at each of its national conventions, including the recent American Expeditionary Forces Convention held in Paris, has overwhelmingly voted to have enacted into law legislation for the retirement of the emergency Army officers permanently disabled in line of duty during the World War so as to place them on the same footing as the other eight classes of disabled officers who are now on the retired lists; and

Whereas practically all other veterans' organizations have voted in department and national conventions to have enacted into law legislation to accord the disabled emergency Army officers the same retirement privileges long ago accorded by Congress to the other eight classes of officers; and

Whereas bills to grant this justice have been pending in the National Congress since the armistice; and

Whereas measures similar to the Tyson-Fitzgerald bills of the Sixty-ninth Congress will be introduced in the Seventieth Congress: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, eighth State legislature, in special session assembled, at Phoenix, Ariz., That we do favor and urge the passage of such legislation as will eliminate this injustice; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Senators HENRY ASHURST and CARL HAYDEN and Hon. LEWIS W. DOUGLAS, our Representatives in Congress.

Passed the house October 31, 1927. Carried unanimously.

Mr. ASHURST also presented the following senate memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of senate memorial No. 4, of the eighth legislature, regular session, State of Arizona, 1927, "To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, to make appropriations for roads over Indian reservations," all of which is shown by the original bill on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

Senate Memorial 4, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled, to make appropriations for roads over Indian reservations

Your memorialist, the Eighth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represents:

That of the 73,000,000 acres of land comprising the State of Arizona, approximately three-fifth are reserved by the Government of the United States;

That over these reserved lands the State of Arizona exercises no supervision nor jurisdiction;

That 20,000,000 acres of these lands are reserved by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of the Indians in the State of Arizona;

That the above condition exists in many States;

That these Indian reservations are so situated as to prevent a systematic development and extension of county, State, or national highways without the cooperation and assistance of the Government of the United States;

That the Congress of the United States in enacting a most beneficent national road law has wholly failed to make any provisions for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon the lands reserved by the Federal Government to the use and benefit of its Indian wards;

Whereas adequate transportation facilities are a vital factor in the prosperity and civilization of any country and are essential to the development of its agriculture and manufacture, to the working of its forests and mines, and to the spread of education and enlightenment among its citizens; and

Whereas the public roads of Arizona are for a large percentage of her citizens, and especially for the 42,000 Indian wards of the Federal Government, the only avenues of transportation leading from the point of production to the point of consumption or rail shipment, and these avenues are only now in the process of their development; and

Whereas a very large portion of the State of Arizona is held in reserve by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of its Indian wards, and these reservations are so situated as to prevent any economic or systematic road-building activities on the part of the State government as continuous highways are rendered impracticable; this is especially true on the Apache Indian Reservation, as practically the entire long and important stretch of road from Rice to Springerville is on the reservation; and

Whereas a further inequity results from the fact that traffic in its development takes no account of reservation and State boundaries, and the State government is powerless to provide for the extension of its highway system through the adjoining and intervening reservations; and

Whereas the improvement of highways should be commensurate with their importance, and a system of highways upon the Indian reservations in Arizona would form the only avenue by which the Indian nations could transport their products to a market, or over which the many thousands of tourists from all parts of the United States could pass to view the marvelous beauties of our natural and historical wonders: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, That the development of the material resources of the Indians of Arizona can best be furthered, their material prosperity best enhanced, their education and civilization more readily achieved, and that close association with civilization which has proved to be the efficient means of equipping them to share in the responsibilities of life most certainly assured by means of highways constructed and maintained over and upon the lands reserved by the Government of the United States to their use and benefit; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to enact any legislation which may be necessary to provide adequate and continual appropriation for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon Indian reservations in Arizona joining to and in conjunction with the system of State highways;

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to Representatives of Arizona in Congress and chambers of commerce in the State of Arizona; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

Mr. ASHURST also presented the following senate memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

STATE OF ARIZONA,

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of Senate Memorial 3, of the Eighth Legislature, regular session, State of Arizona, 1927, "Memorial to the Congress of the United States praying for an appropriation to provide for the construction of public roads leading into and through national forests, Indian reservations, and other public-land areas," all of which is shown by the original bill on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

Senate Memorial 3. Memorial to the Congress of the United States praying for an appropriation to provide for the construction of public roads leading into and through national forests, Indian reservations, and other public-land areas

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the members of the Eighth Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represent:

Whereas there are in the 13 public-land States of the Northwest 382,032,487 acres of unappropriated and unreserved public lands, Indian reservations, and national-forest areas that are nontaxable and that do not contribute to the building of public roads, except the 25 per cent of the gross proceeds of the forests, and it is only a negligible amount.

The nontaxable areas of these States are as follows:

	Acres.
Arizona	48,692,722
California	38,173,917
Colorado	24,562,927
Idaho	27,366,215
Minnesota	1,855,548
Montana	30,829,638
Nevada	58,453,899
New Mexico	30,418,359
Oregon	27,384,757
South Dakota	4,386,100
Utah	39,207,579
Washington	15,357,519
Wyoming	34,343,307
Total	382,032,487

Whereas Indian reservations, forest reserves, and other public lands stretch across county, State, and interstate highways, becoming insurmountable barriers to highway improvement, community, and State development; and

Whereas in many counties of the public-land States from 50 to 75 per cent of their area is nonassessable public-land area, affording no taxes for schools and roads; and

Whereas the public-land States, owing to large area, small population, and small valuation have not been able to participate in the 50–50 provision of the Federal highway act; and

Whereas highway projects in the public-land States initiated must halt unless appropriations are made to effect their completion: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to pass such laws to make much greater appropriations for roads in and leading into national forests, in and through Indian reservations; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President, the Secretary of the Interior, the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Public Roads, the United States Senators and Members of Congress, the governors of the 13 public-land States.

Mr. ODDIE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which, with related papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1927.

Hon. W. G. GREATHOUSE,
Secretary of State, Carson City, Nev.

MY DEAR MR. GREATHOUSE: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, inclosing a certified copy of Assembly Joint Resolution 5, memorializing Congress to establish a Government hospital in the State of Nevada.

Your letter and the inclosure reached me after Congress had finally adjourned, and I was, therefore, unable to present it to the Senate. I shall do so at the opening of the next session.

Sincerely yours,

TASKER L. ODDIE.

STATE OF NEVADA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Carson City, Nev., February 28, 1927.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with the instructions of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, I herewith inclose certified copy of Assembly Joint Resolution 5.

Yours truly,

W. G. GREATHOUSE,
Secretary of State.

Assembly Joint Resolution 5, approved February 25, 1927, memorializing Congress to establish a Government hospital in the State of Nevada

Whereas the State of Nevada has always been among the foremost in furnishing men, money, and otherwise supporting the Federal Government in the defense and preservation of the Union; and

Whereas many ex-service men and women reside within the State of Nevada and vicinity; and

Whereas Nevada, due to its favorable climatic condition for the treatment of various diseases, should be considered: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of Nevada and the Senate, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to establish a Government hospital within the State of Nevada for the treatment of disabled ex-service men and women; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate and to the Speaker of the House, to each of our Senators, and to our Representative in Washington.

D. H. TANDY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN W. WRIGHT,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
MORLEY GRISWOLD,
President of the Senate.
V. R. MERIALDO,
Secretary of the Senate.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, W. G. Greathouse, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original Assembly Joint Resolution 5 now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State, at my office, in Carson City, Nev., this 28th day of February, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.]

W. G. GREATHOUSE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. TRAMMELL presented the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

House Memorial 7 to the Congress of the United States of America asking that the grave of Territorial Governor Duval be properly marked with a bronze tablet, whereon shall be given suitable credit for services rendered as Territorial Governor of Florida

Whereas W. P. Duval, Florida's first territorial governor, serving during the years 1822–1834, departed this life on the 18th day of March, 1854; and

Whereas the remains of the said W. P. Duval were buried on the 20th day of March, 1854, in the Congressional Cemetery, range 46, site 5, Washington, D. C.; and

Whereas the said W. P. Duval served his country faithfully and fearlessly as the first Territorial Governor of Florida, and was a pioneer in the settling of the State of Florida; and

Whereas the faithful service rendered by the said W. P. Duval is worthy of recognition by the United States of America: Therefore be it Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectively requested to make suitable recognition of the service rendered by W. P. Duval as the first Territorial Governor of Florida, and that a suitable bronze tablet be placed upon the grave of the said W. P. Duval, and that proper inscription be made thereon, recognizing the service rendered by the said W. P. Duval as first Territorial Governor of Florida during the years 1822–1834, and that proper appropiration be made therefor.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state of Florida be requested to send a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Florida.

Approved by the governor June 6, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Memorial 7, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. TRAMMELL also presented the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint Memorial Resolution 3

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Whereas the Federal Government has built at Muscle Shoals, Ala., at an expense of more than $150,000,000, a vast plant designated for the manufacture of nitrates for munitions in time of war and for the production of fertilizer products in time of peace; and

Whereas this plant has lain idle for more than eight years, since the close of the World War, thus disregarding one of the specific provisions of the national defense act, under which the plant was authorized, which provision was intended to result in the production of nitrates at a cost that would materially reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers of the United States; and

Whereas the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals representing an investment of $100,000,000, instead of being operated for the manufacture of cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of the Nation, are, and have been, idle for many years, while the Wilson Dam development is temporarily leased to private interests; and

Whereas the farmers of the United States are using more than 7,000,000 tons of fertilizer per year, costing more than $200,000,000; and the farmers of Florida alone are spending more than $14,000,000 per year for their fertiilzer; and

Whereas we have the assurance of competent authorities that the facilities of the Muscle Shoals plant are adequate for the production of ample nitrates for the needs of American agriculture: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and hereby is, memorialized to enact at its next session such legislation as will, without further costly delay, start the vast Muscle Shoals plant to its intended work, which was the manufacture of nitrates for the needs of our Nation's agriculture, the production of munitions for war and other national defense purposes, and that any power in excess of these requirements be distributed to those States within transmission distances; be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, GREENE, and YON are hereby urgently requested to use their most vigorous effort to accomplish the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of state of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, to the Congress of this Nation, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor, May 25, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Joint Memorial Resolution 3, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled resolution on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

House Joint Memorial 5

Whereas vast annual importations of citrus fruits are made into the United States from Porto Rico, Cuba, Jamaica, and the Isle of Pines; and

Whereas much of this fruit is picked and shipped into our country while in an immature state, thus placing upon the market fruit of low quality, unpalatable, and unfit for human consumption; and

Whereas such importation of immature fruit is received into the ports of our Nation without restriction; inspection and regulation now being imposed upon our domestic production by Federal laws; and

Whereas this practice not only places fruit of doubtful healthfulness and low food value before the consuming public of the United States but likewise imposes undue, unfair, and destructive competition upon the citrus growers of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact at its next session such legislation as will properly regulate the importation of all immature fruit in such manner as to correct and eliminate the evils of the present baneful practice; be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, GREEN, and YON are hereby urgently requested to use their most vigorous efforts to accomplish the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of the State of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor May 25, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Joint Memorial 5 as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. TRAMMELL also presented the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Concurrent Resolution 8

Whereas it appears from reports of the Treasury of the United States that a surplus of funds is being accumulated; and

Whereas an excessive income tax has a strong tendency to stifle trade and causes the withdrawal of capital from active business enterprises: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress use every honorable means to amend the income tax law of the United States to the end that a substantial reduction of the tax on incomes be made.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state is hereby requested to send a copy of this resolution, under the great seal of the State, to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the United States Senate Finance Committee, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the press of this State.

Approved by the governor, April 23, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Concurrent Resolution 8, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled resolution on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 7

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That—

Whereas the people of Florida, by an overwhelming majority, adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the State from levying in the future any inheritance or income tax; and

Whereas the State's finances are in such an admirable condition, that, although it has no severance tax, no corporation tax, no corporation stock transfer tax, no franchise tax, no income tax, and no inheritance tax, it has no bonded indebtedness of any kind or character, does not owe a dollar, and has, of the 1st of April, in its treasury, in excess of $11,466,280.05 in cash, thus demonstrating beyond question that the levying of an inheritance or an income tax is absolutely unnecessary in this State; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in enacting the present revenue law, providing therein for a Federal inheritance tax, but allowing those States that have inheritance taxes a credit to the extent of 80 per cent of the taxes so paid, the avowed purpose of which was to force the States of Florida, Alabama, and others similarly situated, to levy an inheritance tax; and

Whereas taxing the dead, either by Federal legislation or State legislation, is a capital levy and should not be resorted to except in time of war or other grave emergency; and

Whereas an inheritance tax, if it is to be written into law at all, is a prerogative of the State, a political question exclusively within the province of the State; and

Whereas Congress by giving to the respective States that have inheritance taxes, credit for 80 per cent of the taxes so paid, admits and concedes that the Federal Government does not need the revenue; and

Whereas the action of Congress, in endeavoring by Federal legislation to coerce a sovereign State into enacting legislation contrary to the wishes of the people of that State in a question of purely local concern, is unprecedented, arbitrary, indefensible, and contrary to the very fundamentals of our American form of government: Be it further

Resolved, That we protest against the passage of a Federal inheritance tax, and especially one in the form of that which has been passed, and we regard such action upon the part of Congress as unnecessary, uncalled for, indefensible, without justification, and contrary to the fundamental principles upon which the Republic is founded; that we reaffirm our confidence in the wisdom of the people of Florida in adopting the constitutional amendment prohibiting the Legislature of Florida in the future from ever levying any State income or inheritance taxes; and that the State of Florida declines to be coerced into repealing the constitutional provision forbidding the levying of taxes upon the estates of dead men, but avows its intention of forever maintaining and continuing the constitutional amendment in question: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to demand the repeal of the Federal inheritance tax and that they continue to take such vigorous action as may in their judgment be deemed best to bring this about: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to all Members of Congress, the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the chairman of the United States Senate Finance Committee, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, the press of this State and of the Nation.

Approved by the governor April 23, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,

Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled resolution on file in this office.

Secretary of State.

Mr. TRAMMELL also presented the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Memorial 3

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Whereas the State of Florida and the counties of Dade and Monroe have caused to be dug a sea-level canal across the peninsula of Florida from the waters of the Atlantic Ocean at Miami to the waters of the Gulf of Mexico at Poinciana, saving all but 9 miles of the total distance; and

Whereas it is hoped and expected that this 9-mile gap will be completed and opened within the near future, thus establishing a sea-level water route across the State of Florida: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and hereby is, memorialized to pass the necessary legislation looking to the investigation and survey of this cross-State waterway, in order to disclose the feasibility and propriety of its being taken over by the Federal Government for improvement, operation, and maintenance, to the end—

(1) That the benefits and protection afforded by the Atlantic inside waterway route from Boston south and through the Florida East Coast Canal, now terminating at Miami, may be immediately extended across the peninsula of Florida to the Gulf of Mexico:

(2) That small shipping in passing from the Atlantic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico may be relieved of the necessity of rounding Cape Sable, with its attendant dangers and hazards;

(3) That the water-route distance for such shipping between points on the Atlantic Ocean and points on the Gulf of Mexico may be shortened;

(4) That this sea-level canal, which traverses the heart of the Everglades, may be developed to its maximum usefulness in serving as an artery of water transportation for this vast agricultural empire which is about to be opened; and

(5) That this canal, developed to its full capacity, with its outlets to the east and to the west, may be utilized in the draining of thousands of acres of Everglades lands and the ultimate reclamation of the Florida Peninsula south of the Tamiami Trail; be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, BREEN, and YON are hereby most earnestly requested to extend their efforts toward the accomplishment of the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of state of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial under the great seal of the State to the President of the United States, to the Congress of this Nation, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor May 7, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,

Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Memorial 3, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

House Memorial 2 to the Congress of the United States requesting an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the St. Johns River between Jacksonville and Palatka and Sanford, Fla.

Whereas the navigation of the St. Johns River between Jacksonville and Palatka and Sanford, Fla., is at times seriously impeded by the several bars or shoals that prevent the passage of vessels now plying said river; and

Whereas the present commerce of said river is such as to demand a deeper and safer channel and the continuous improvement thereof, and amply justifies a considerable expenditure to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That it is of vital importance to the commerce of the State of Florida that the Congress of the United States should make an appropriation sufficient for the improvement, permanent as well as satisfactory, of the said river;

Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be urged to secure the passage of the legislation necessary to accomplish this object; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida be requested to furnish each of the Senators and Representatives aforesaid certified copy of this memorial.

Approved by the governor, May 25, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Memorial 2, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. TRAMMELL also presented the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

House Memorial 1, directed to the President and Congress of the United States, requesting the establishment of military schools or camps for the purpose of training aviators upon the present Government fields of Dorr and Carlstrom, located near Arcadia, in De Soto County, Fla.

Whereas the people of the State of Florida are intensely interested in welfare and maintaining the common defense of the Nation; and

Whereas the training of aviators is essential to insuring the public welfare and maintaining the common defense of the Nation; and

Whereas the people of the United States now own in the State of Florida two flying fields, to wit, Dorr and Carlstrom, located near Arcadia, in De Soto County, Fla.; and

Whereas said fields are not being used now as aviation training camps; and

Whereas the facilities of said fields for flying are unsurpassed by any in the world, due to the region about the camps and the atmospheric conditions most conducive to the safety for flying; and

Whereas the Florida climate is equal and mild and the location of the camps naturally healthful; and

Whereas the said flying fields of Dorr and Carlstrom form an ideal location for the training of aviators: Be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the President of the United States and Congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly solicited to take such steps as may be necessary, either by the legislative or executive branches of the Federal Government, to establish at the fields of Dorr and Carlstrom, located near Arcadia, in De Soto County, Fla., Government schools or training camps for the purpose of training and equipping aviators for the use of aerial service in the United States Army, or for other public service: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be furnished by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States.

Approved by the governor April 23, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Memorial 1, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

House Memorial 6

A joint resolution proposing a memorial to Congress indorsing the support by the Government of adequate appropriations for the support of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves

Whereas there is located in Florida two separate regiments of the Florida National Guard, which is maintained to a large extent by Federal appropriation of money; and

Whereas there is also located in the State of Florida various units of the Organized Reserves constituted under the provisions of the national defense act of 1920; and

Whereas the National Guard form an essential and necessary organization for use in peace time, as evidenced by its services during the recent hurricane disaster in Florida, as well as an adequate fighting organization in the event of war; and

Whereas the people of Florida desire to see the National Guard and the Organized Reserves of the United States supported by adequate appropriations reasonably sufficient to enable these organizations to accomplish the purpose of their organization, said appropriations to be as liberal as may be consistent with the welfare of the public and the general good: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Legislature of the State of Florida herein memorializes and requests its two Senators in the United States Senate and its four Representatives in the Congress of the United States to use all honorable means in their power to prevent the handicapping or crippling of the National Guard or Organized Reserve by the withdrawal of any existing appropriations therefrom, and that they use all honorable means in their power to secure for the use of the National Guard and Organized Reserves as liberal an appropriation for the training of such National Guard and Reserves as may be consistent with the welfare of the Government, and that a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the United States Senators from Florida and to each of the Congressmen from Florida, to the President and Vice President of the United States, and to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the Chief of the Militia Bureau of the War Department, all duly certified to and under the great seal of the State of Florida.

Approved by the governor May 25, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Memorial 6, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate Resolution 2, submitted by Mr. NORRIS on Monday last, opposing the seating of WILLIAM S. VARE as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ferris	La Follette	Schall
Barkley	Fess	McKellar	Sheppard
Bayard	Fletcher	McLean	Shipstead
Bingham	Frazier	McMaster	Shortridge
Black	Gerry	McNary	Simmons
Blaine	Gillett	Mayfield	Smith
Blease	Glass	Metcalf	Smoot
Borah	Goff	Moses	Steck
Bratton	Gould	Neely	Steiwer
Brookhart	Greene	Norbeck	Stephens
Broussard	Hale	Nye	Swanson
Bruce	Harris	Oddie	Thomas
Capper	Harrison	Overman	Trammell
Caraway	Hawes	Phipps	Tydings
Copeland	Hayden	Pine	Tyson
Couzens	Heflin	Pittman	Wagner
Curtis	Howell	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Dale	Johnson	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Deneen	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Watson
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Edwards	King	Sackett	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have listened to the debate with as much attention and interest, I think, as the average Senator. I think that it has been placed on a very high plane. I believe that it involves one of the most delicate questions we have ever had before the Senate in my memory.

I am not able to go to the full extent of the proponents of either side of the question, meaning by that that I do not think I could subscribe to the view that the only qualifications upon which we could decide are those which are specifically mentioned in the section, limited to three. I think that is rather a strained position. However, it is backed by a great number of the strongest minds of the country in the past, and it is supported by great talent here in this body at present. I think that this body does have some latitude in going beyond mere age, citizenship, or inhabitancy, and residence. We have got to be reasonable in the interpretation or construction of any statute, or even the Constitution, of course, less important in the statute than in the Constiution, because one is fundamental law, constitutional sanction, while the other is simply an enactment which might easily be changed.

On the other hand, I can not go with those who claim that we have the latitude, upon whatever qualification we prescribe, to stop at the door and refuse recognition, in the form of an oath, to a man who comes with his credentials without fault or irregularity.

There is a background to the Senate organization which I do not believe is quite fully appreciated—I mean from the standpoint of what the fathers had in mind. There was a very bitter discussion in the Constitutional Convention which lasted for three weeks on whether this was to be a National or a Federal Government, whether it was to be based upon population and influence or wealth, or whether it was to be based upon the States. There was a school which believed that if a State was large in population and wealth it ought to have a greater influence than the State which was small in population and without wealth. That did not seem tenable any more than that we should give one who has wealth more votes than a citizen who is not wealthy. That particular provision, therefore, was not very strong. At the same time there was such a strong belief in the convention that the Government should be national, based upon population, rather than built upon States that, upon a compromise submitted to three weeks' of discussion, it was determined that the Government should be bicameral rather than unicameral, with one of the Houses based upon population and the other based upon States. That was the compromise finally reached after a very bitter discussion, resulting in a House based upon population and the other on States.

So jealous were those who believed in the rights of the States they not only made the representation equal, without regard to size, but they did the unusual thing of putting in Article V providing for amendments a clause prohibiting forever the changing of the Constitution in such a way that the equality of the States in this body should ever be interfered with. That was done in the Constitutional Convention itself; it was not an addendum; it did not come as an amendment, but came as the expression of the convention. After a discussion of this question, it was provided that in this body should forever be represented equally each State. Not only that but the framers of the Constitution provided that the Members of this body representing the States should be elected not by the people but by the States in their legislative bodies. That, of course, has been changed by the seventeenth amendment.

Mr. President, I should like to get before the Senate the attitude of the fathers on the particular question of equality in the Senate, and why that attitude was assumed. There had been at one time, as is perfectly well known to every student of history, slavery throughout all the States. Every State in the Union, at one time or another, with probably one exception, recognized slavery as an institution. Slavery gradually ceased to exist in one section of the country, but it grew in popularity in another section. It became such a distinctive institution in that section that there was fear that it might be interfered with by the Federal Government. Provision to prevent such interference was one of the things that was written into the Constitution, in Article V, relating to amendments, where this language was used:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article.

Under that provision the Constitution could not be amended to interfere with the institution of slavery prior to 1808. Slavery was the sensitive question then. Then there follows another provision:

> And that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

So, in respect only to those two subjects, did the Federal organic law forbid amendment. As to slavery, the inhibition ceased to exist after 1808, but the other is yet holding. There is a reason for this.

I wish Senators could remember a condition that probably has escaped their memory. When the Federal Constitution took effect we had 13 States, 7 of which were free belonging to the one class, and 6 of which were slave States. That resulted in a representation of 14 Senators in this body, believing in one philosophy and 12 in the other.

After the adoption of the Constitution, the first State to be admitted into the Union was Vermont. That made 16 Senators from free States and 12 Senators from slave States. The next State to be admitted was Kentucky, a slave State. The next was Tennessee, a slave State. That made the representation in this body equal on the most sensitive question that had been discussed in the Constitutional Convention, in the formation of the Government, in the State legislatures, and in the House and the Senate.

In 1803 Ohio was admitted. That gave the balance of power to the free States. In 1812 Louisiana was admitted, and that made the free and the slave States again equal in representation here. In 1816 Indiana was admitted. That gave the control of this body to the free States.

In 1817 Mississippi, a slave State, was admitted; and in 1818 Illinois, another free State, was admitted. In 1819 Alabama, another slave State, was admitted, making representation as between the free and the slave States in this body again equal.

When the sensitive question of the admission of Missouri was reached the slavery issue was still dominant. At no time in our history was there ever more bitter discussion. Finally Jesse Thomas, of Illinois, proposed a compromise, which afterwards was formulated by Henry Clay, and is known as the Missouri compromise, the author of which was the famous Kentucky Senator.

Keep in mind that then and for years previously first one and then the other party was in control of this body, and the subject of slavery was constantly discussed with deep intensity and great seriousness.

When finally a compromise as to the admission of Missouri was reached they looked for another State to overbalance Missouri, and in 1820 the upper portion of Massachusetts which had been cut off was erected into Maine, which was admitted as a State. In the following year, however, Missouri was admitted to statehood, making the representation from the free States and the slave States again equal.

Let me ask, Senators, in the face of such a contest which had obtained from our beginning what would have been the result if, when Thomas H. Benton, afterwards author of The Thirty Years' View, one of the famous publications of this country, appeared at the door of the Senate as Missouri's first Representative in this body, he had been denied the right to take the oath on some particular allegation that might have been made here? What would have been the result if such a step had been undertaken at that time or at any other time preceding that? That was in 1821. Coming down to 1836 Arkansas was admitted. Then in 1837 Michigan was admitted, and again the balance was equal. During all this time an intense debate was going on. Just prior to that time in 1832 the feeling ran so high that South Carolina had proposed to secede from the Union because of interference with State rights.

Following this episode came the admission of Texas in 1845, with a provision that the State should not be cut up into more than four States. Had Texas been so divided that would have given the slave States a majority in the Senate of three States, but the act admitting Texas provided that it should not be cut up into more than four States, and that in no event could such a division be made without its consent.

The consent of Texas was never given and Texas came into the Union with only two Senators instead of, as might have been, eight Senators. Then followed the admission of Iowa (1846), which put the slave States and the free States again on an equality. Then followed the admission of Minnesota. I should have said that Florida was admitted in 1845. As we approach 1850 we again find an equality between the slave and the free States in this body, there being as many sitting Members representing free States as there were slave States. So when the point was reached of admitting into the Union the first State—California—to be carved out of the territory which was gained as the result of the Mexican War there was a crisis.

I do not believe that those who will read a description of the appearance on the 15th day of February, 1850, of Henry Clay, when he offered his famous compromise, will ever forget it. He had spoken for two days here on the question of the compromise proposed in connection with the admission of California as a free State. The serious feature was that California, a free State, was carved from territory that belonged to the slave section of the country. He was followed by John C. Calhoun on the 4th day of March, who stepped into the Chamber wrapped in flannels, suffering from an incurable disease that it was known would soon cause his death. When for the last time in this body he rose to speak on the rights of the States he found that he had no voice, when he handed his speech, which had been carefully prepared, to a Senator from Virginia and asked him to read it for him. That was the last utterance of that great constitutional thinker of South Carolina, the greatest representative of the doctrine of State rights the Senate ever heard. That speech was followed three days later by Daniel Webster, who made his fatal 7th of March speech in which he suggested that more or less of a compromise should be agreed upon. The outcome of this struggle was the admission of California, and the admission of that State for the first time broke for all time to come the balance between the free and the slave States. May I ask what would have been the result had a Senator from California been stopped at the door as you now propose to do?

It is not necessary for me to go any further. Everybody knows how intense the feeling ran between the two sections, which unfortunately eventuated into civil war. I repeat this question: During that unfortunate long-drawn struggle over that most intense question, which divided the Nation along geographical lines, what would have been the result if either side had excluded a Senator appearing at the door of the Senate, demanding to take the oath of office, and bearing credentials which furnished valid evidence on the part of the people back home in his State that he had been duly elected? Could a decision denying a State representation be secured free from prejudice?

There is a background that I think ought not to be overlooked, for while such a condition will hardly arise again, yet it is barely possible there might come a time when this House might be divided on geographical or upon religious lines or upon sentiment on prohibition or upon any other question as to which there could be an organization of public opinion with such volume that it would not be possible to get a clarified view free of prejudice. It is for that reason that I am so much concerned about the precedent that we are here establishing.

Mr. President, I do not condone the expenditure of money; I deplore it. I think that the expenditure of money in election contests is reaching a point where it is almost a public scandal. I am not charging anyone with doing anything that is criminal or offensive, but I do say that under our method of primary elections the expenditure of money has come to be a problem with which I hope we may deal. I do not know that we can deal in this body with the expenditure of money in primary elections. I know the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], whose judgment on matters of this kind must be respected, takes the view that we in this body and the other can legislate on primary elections in a State. I, however, have serious doubt about that.

I also can not understand how this body can interfere with a State if it decides not to elect a Senator. There are others who say, and I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] takes that view, that this body could step over into the State and compel the election. The Constitution says the Senate shall be made up of two Members from each State, elected originally by the legislatures thereof and now by the people.

Suppose the people of any State decline to elect a Senator? I do not see that we have any power to step over into the State and compel it to do so. In other words, that would be depriving the State of equal representation by its own consent, and that is the limitation in the Constitution—that it can not be deprived of its equal representation in the Senate without its consent. But if a State declines to do it, I have not seen any authority for the statement that this body has control over the people in the selection of a Member of this body or the other body.

That involves quite a delicate question. If we should proceed in the regular way of administering the oath to the Member elect, and then proceed to make an investigation, giving the Member a right as a Senator to present his case, and not only that, but vastly greater than that, giving the State its right to be represented here, in view of the fact that under the Constitution it can not be denied that right unless it itself gives the consent—if we should proceed on that basis there would not be, it seems to me, any danger to anyone. There could be none to the State whose decision was made up in an open election, with all facts at hand at the time of election. There could be none to the Nation; there certainly could be none to this body. Any such danger can be removed by our constitutional processes.

That has been the rule; and the rule, it seems to me, is wise. I know there are exceptions, but those exceptions are easily understood. There are 16 of them. In six of these the Members elect were charged with disloyalty; and when the charge was made that they were disloyal, of course that would go to the element of treason which disqualifies by force of the Constitution. It also goes to the question of taking an oath. No one doubts that in cases such as disloyalty the oath can be denied. That was done over in the House of Representatives when I was a Member there, and for that I voted. But when it is a question of prima facie evidence in the credentials unquestioned, I do not see how this body, in view not only of our past history but of the sound construction of the Constitution, can deny the right to take the oath.

Several Members who were denied the right to take the oath were denied on the basis that the States that sent them here were not regularly organized. I do not believe that is a very safe rule to follow, because that occurred immediately after the Civil War, and everybody knows the intensity of feeling prevailing at that time. The big question then was reconstruction. There was a vast difference of opinion as to how that was to be done.

Lincoln did not agree with the majority control on the plan of reconstruction. He offered in the early period of the Civil War, as early as 1862, a plan which, if it had been accepted, would have avoided the bitterness that grew out of the contest. Later, however, led by men like Thaddeus Stevens, there were other conditions named, and one of the conditions was the ratification of the fourteenth amendment, which intended to force suffrage upon the South in the colored man, or else deny representation in the House to that extent.

That was one of the fiercely resisted conditions of reconstruction; and when a State reconstructed without it and presented its Senator elect here, this body refused to accept the credentials on the ground that the State had not been properly reconstructed and was not authorized to hold such elections nor issue such certificates. I do not think that would be a safe plan to follow as a precedent, because of the intense bitterness of feeling and the inevitable dispute as to really what was a regularly organized State. It seems to me that the only plan that would be fair to the State and in consonance with what we have done heretofore would be to permit the Senator designate or Senator elect to take the oath, and then I propose to use my own judgment on what I shall do after the State has been permitted to be represented here and the person charged has a right to be heard in his own defense.

Mr. President, if I were in doubt on a great question like this, I should naturally look for some authority in whom I had confidence. When we come to a dispute of this character, fortunately we are not without great authority. I suppose every Member on the other side of the aisle will agree with me that Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, known as the Old Roman, was one of the greatest constitutional lawyers of the country. In a controversy in this body, when a question of constitutional law came up, and James G. Blaine had made a statement and Allen G. Thurman rose and corrected it, Blaine paid him the compliment of saying, "Whenever I am in doubt on a question of constitutional law, I naturally turn to the Nestor of this body," referring to Allen G. Thurman. He is on record on this identical subject as saying that the procedure is to allow the Senator elect to take the oath and then proceed, with which opinion Blaine agreed.

The same thing is true of George F. Hoar, probably one of our greatest lawyers.

The same thing is true of Judge Cooley, certainly one of the best writers on constiutional limitations.

The same thing is true in the case of sitting Members of this body; for in two cases that I have read—MOSES and Newberry—the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] took exactly the same view, that the oath should first be administered and then we should proceed in a regular way. It seems to me that the great weight of authority is on one side of the question.

It has been stated that a question like this is to be determined largely by what the public is thinking. I recognize that it would be very easy to go with the crowd. I know what it means to announce that there has been too much money expended; that there has been corruption. I recognize, by the correspondence that reaches my desk to-day, the feeling of certain classes of people. It would be easy to go with the crowd; but I can not get my consent—and the election next year has no effect whatever—I can not get my consent to vote to deny any State its representation and a hearing in this body under the information that I have of the history of my country and the background of the maintenance of equality of State representation in this body.

When these States send their representatives here, the men who are knocking at the door of the Senate have a right to be heard not as private citizens but as elected Members of this body whose credentials are not questioned, then I am ready to go into the question in full, and reserve my right to vote in accordance with the facts that are divulged. Then I would not feel bound to limit qualifications to age, inhabitancy, and residence, but would include questions of corrupt use of money if such could be established. As we are now proceeding it is proposed to violate that part of the Constitution which secures equal representation here and find a Member guilty without a hearing as a Member—a dangerous step which may plague us in the future.

I conclude what I have to say by a reference to John Marshall, the country's greatest Chief Justice, when he sat on the famous case of Aaron Burr. It was well known that the President of the United States at that time felt that Burr was guilty of treason. It is well known that he wanted him to be convicted, and the Chief Justice fully understood it. The prosecutors proceeded to introduce evidence that was not admissible, and the Chief Justice declined to accept the evidence. It subjected him to the fiercest attack; and when the Chief Justice referred to it he did so in the language I am about to read, knowing how popular it was to find Burr guilty of treason, first because he was one of the most brilliant men in America, second because he had been Vice President and had come within 1 vote of being elected President over Thomas Jefferson; and not only that, but because he had been a great leader. The Chief Justice, in refusing to admit this evidence that was not admissible, made this statement:

> That this court dares not usurp power is most true.
> That this court dares not shrink from its duty is not less true.
> No man is desirous of placing himself in a disagreeable situation. No man is desirous of becoming the peculiar subject of calumny. No man, might he let the bitter cup pass from him without self-reproach, would drain it to the bottom. But if he has no choice in the case; if there is no alternative presented to him but a dereliction of duty, or the opprobrium of those who are denominated the world, he merits the contempt as well as the indignation of his country, who can hesitate which to embrace.

I recognize that it is popular to charge men high in position with corruption. It is a popular passion to want to punish those who have reached a certain position in public life. All these facts are well known to all of us. Before I would vote to exclude any man, however popular might be the demand, I should want to know certainly all of the facts in the case. It matters not how popular it would be to exclude him; the only course here open, as we see it, is to perform our duty. To me that duty is clear and requires of me to do what in my judgment is just to the State and in consonance with the dignity of this body and the preservation of the integrity of the institutions of the United States.

For that reason I shall vote, as I did in the Illinois case, to permit this Senator elect to take the oath. If he is permitted, I shall vote then to go fully into all the charges that are alleged against him, and reserve my right to vote to exclude him if the facts justify it. But I can not vote to take away from a State the right to be represented here; and I can not vote to find a man guilty without first giving him a trial.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have reported the following substitute for the resolution now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all after the word "resolution," on page 1, and insert the following words:

> "Whereas WILLIAM S. VARE, from the State of Pennsylvania, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Senator from said State: Therefore be it
> "Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of a complete investigation thereof, the said WILLIAM S. VARE is entitled to be sworn as a Senator upon his prima facie case.
> "Resolved further, That when sworn in his credentials and all the papers in relation to his right to retain his seat be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to report thereon at the earliest practicable moment, and not in any case later than February 8, 1928."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I understand that the impression prevails, at least in the minds of some of the Senators, that our undisclosed intention in asking that Mr. VARE be sworn in now is to get his case into the Senate in such fashion that we can rely on that clause of the Constitution which requires a two-thirds vote to expel him. I want to say that that impression does not do us justice, if such an impression exists, and I want to say for Mr. VARE, for the State of Pennsylvania, as far as I am authorized to speak for it, and certainly to say for myself, that I admit now that if Mr. VARE is sworn in the Senate will have authority and power by a majority vote to declare his seat vacant in the same manner that they did in the case of Senator Lorimer.

Not only do I not think that we would be within the protection of any two-thirds rule, but I am willing now, so far as lies in my power, to stipulate for Mr. VARE and for myself that neither of us will invoke any such protection; neither of us will assert that a two-thirds vote is necessary to vacate his seat.

So that I beg Senators to believe that our reason for asking the immediate administration of the oath is not that we may trick the Senate into a position where more than a majority will be necessary to carry out its wish. The sole purpose in asking is that the State of Pennsylvania may not for 60 days, or 6 months, or for whatever time the Senate plans to spend on the matter, be deprived of the 2 votes in this body to which the Constitution entitles it.

Then I think there is an impression that our idea was that at least we might, if we got Mr. VARE sworn in, drag out the final determination of the case so that in the long run he would have served a large part of his term, whatever the Senate might do.

As the best evidence of our good faith in that regard, we have suggested that the report be returned within 60 days, so that by no possibility could the case be dragged out and Mr. VARE be given for a long period of time a seat to which, in the end, the Senate might hold he was not entitled. That is in the substitute resolution we have presented.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I gladly yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If Mr. VARE should be seated under the Senator's resolution, would a majority or two-thirds be required to expel him?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. A majority would have authority to declare his seat vacant, which is tantamount to expulsion.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator would not contend, then, that two-thirds were necessary, if that question arose hereafter?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I would not make that contention. I have tried to make that very clear, because some Senators have explained their antagonism to our present application by saying to their people back home who could not understand their attitude that if they voted to swear Mr. VARE in, it would have the effect of fortifying him behind the two-thirds rule. I do not believe that a two-thirds vote is necessary to declare the seat vacant.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is aware of the fact, of course, that a number of Senators on both sides of the Chamber take that position. The Senator would not think he could estop another Senator, who believes that under the Constitution a two-thirds vote is required, from claiming the right to have it tested by the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. Mr. President, from many experiments, I would not think I could stop any Senator from saying anything.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will treat the matter seriously. If the Constitution requires a two-thirds vote in the opinion of any Senator he would be entitled to have his view of the subject passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely. I mean to answer seriously. In the Lorimer case a majority believed that Lorimer should be expelled, and they declared his seat vacant by a majority vote. There is a precedent. If a majority of the Senate, after hearing both sides of the Vare case, should decide that they wanted to have him out of the Senate, they have the power, unquestionably, to pass a resolution declaring the seat vacant.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As to whether a majority or two-thirds vote would be required, would depend upon the form of the resolution.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the resolution declared that the Senator was not entitled to his seat, a majority vote for the resolution would deny him the seat.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I concede that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the resolution provided that he should be expelled from the Senate, it would require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania in that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Arkansas agrees with me in that. I fancy that a majority of the Senate does. If such a resolution, to declare the seat vacant, is presented, and if a point of order is made against it, the majority has power to enforce its will that the majority vote is sufficient.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. FESS. There is one question that has not been discussed, a question in which I am considerably interested. Without anything further being done on the part of Illinois, is there a vacancy in the Senatorship from that State?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I feel sure there is not.

Mr. FESS. What could the State do?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The State can not do anything. The State has commissioned Mr. SMITH, and has given him all the authority and evidence of authority that a Senator elect can have. He is now hung in mid-air. As far as we can tell, he will be knocking on the doors of the Senate for the next six years, saying, "I have in my hand a regular credential"; unless the Senate goes further and declares his seat vacant.

Mr. FESS. In case the matter is held in suspense, and the Senator designate or the Senator elect demands his salary, and the disbursing officer denies it, as he probably would, and the complainant takes the matter to the courts, can he get a decision from the Supreme Court which would involve the Senate's final right?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; he could not. I am clear on that, because under the law which is the only authority for the payment of a Senator's salary, he is entitled to his salary from the time his term begins until an opportunity is offered for taking the oath. The opportunity in the case of Mr. SMITH occurred last Monday, and therefore Mr. SMITH's pay stopped on that date and he is not entitled to any pay at the present time. That is why he could not get the matter into court, even if there were jurisdiction, and I doubt very much whether there is. I doubt if any court in the land would take jurisdiction of a disputed claim to membership in a legislative body of this character, either the Senate or the House.

Mr. FESS. I omitted to state that it appears to me on the question that is now before us that there would be required only a majority vote rather than a two-thirds vote, on the ground that it is not a question of expelling a Senator for an offense but it is a question simply of admitting a Senator designate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It goes to his fundamental right to come into the Senate, not his expulsion for something that occurred afterwards.

Mr. FESS. That has been my opinion.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I agree perfectly that if, after being sworn in, a Senator does something which his fellows consider to be immoral or otherwise improper, it then would take a two-thirds vote to expel him. Clearly that is so, under the Constitution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have sent the case of Senator-elect SMITH to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. He has his credentials. Suppose the committee should report that he is not entitled to be sworn in, and the Senate should adopt that report. He would still have the certificate. Could the governor deprive him then of that certificate in any way?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know of any way. The only way in which the certificate can be rendered nugatory is for the Senate to declare the seat vacant, or for SMITH to resign.

Mr. OVERMAN. So, if we did seat him, and then declared the seat vacant, the governor would have the right to appoint some one else in his place?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He would. Furthermore, of course, Mr. SMITH would have the right to resign, and to run again, or seek another appointment, or follow his own discretion in the matter; but until he resigns his commission, or until we by resolution declare his seat vacant, or expel him, the governor can do nothing, the State of Illinois can do nothing, and the State has one-half of its constitutional representation.

I wanted to bring that home to Senators before they vote on this substitute, because I do not want any Senator to be able to say in good faith that he voted against this time-honored method of treating these cases because he was fearful of some trick to slide in behind that two-thirds rule and get Mr. VARE an advantage which at the moment he does not enjoy.

I want the Senate to realize, too, that there is not in our mind any intention of trying to string this matter out and to get by indirection what the Senate may hold we are not entitled to directly. That is the reason for the 60-day limitation in the substitute resolution.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. May I just add this before I yield? The Senator who is the ranking member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections tells me that, in spite of the very large number of ballots concerned in the Pennsylvania election which are brought in issue in the Wilson-Vare contest, by dint of putting on extra forces and working somewhat over hours he will be able to complete the count of those ballots within this same 60-day limitation. So that neither the election contest nor the inquiry into Mr. VARE's general fitness, if that is to be made, will in any way delay this question beyond the next couple of months.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Would a report of the committee that SMITH was not entitled to his seat, approved by the action of the Senate as a whole, be tantamount to a declaration that the seat was vacant?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If that is the plain implication, then, of course, it would be tantamount to it.

Mr. BRUCE. Would it not be the necessary implication? It seems to me the irresistible implication that he is not entitled to the seat. If so, then as nobody else is entitled to it, and it seems to me as a plain syllogistic principle, the seat is vacant.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator says something that means that, I agree with the Senator it would have that effect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Undoubtedly that is the effect of the precedent the Senator from Pennsylvania himself cited—the Lorimer case. The Senate adopted a resolution declaring that the Senator from Illinois was not entitled to his seat, and it was held to create a vacancy which could be filled under the processes known to the law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We need not quarrel about that. It is a mere matter of the form of words, and I presume the words would be made clear by whomever offers the resolution.

Before I conclude—and I have about finished—I want to call the attention of Senators to one very recent case, which is not in any sense a compelling authority upon us, but which illustrates the construction that is put on this phrase regarding qualifications, and the method of treating those who are supposed to be disqualified in character.

In the oldest of all our Commonwealths, the oldest State in the Union which has had such a provision in its constitution longer, I understand, than we have had it in the Federal Constitution, there came up within this year a case in the Senate of the State of Virginia. Last January a senator elect was shown to have committed forgery and to have been convicted on the charge of committing forgery under two different assumed names long prior to his election to the senate. There was investigation. The facts were brought out without doubt. They turned to the constitution of Virginia, which contains this language:

> Each house shall judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members, may punish them for disorderly behavior and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

When Smith presented himself to take the oath he was stood aside, just as happened here. The matter was referred to the committee on privileges and elections of the Virginia Senate. In their report they recited the passage of the resolution, its reference to them, and said this:

> Whereas the committee, having taken time to hear evidence on the charges presented against said Alfred C. Smith, is of the opinion from the evidence, which is herewith transmitted to the senate, that the moral unfitness of the said Alfred C. Smith has been fully established and he should not be permitted to become a member of the Senate of Virginia; but upon mature consideration reports as follows:
> First. Under a strict construction of the word "qualification," as contained in section 47 of the constitution of Virginia, the committee is of the opinion that it means political and not moral qualifications.
> Second. That the evidence fully justifies the expulsion of Alfred C. Smith from the senate immediately upon his taking the oath of office, and the committee so reports and advises.

That report was adopted by a vote of 36 to 2. The journal then continues:

> Mr. Alfred C. Smith, having previously filed in the office of the clerk of the senate a certificate of his election, came forward and the clerk of the senate administered to him the oath prescribed by law. Immediately upon the administering of the oath Mr. Alfred C. Smith tendered his resignation as a member of the Senate of Virginia.

Obviously, if he had not done so he would have been expelled within the next 60 seconds. There was some debate as to whether his resignation should be accepted, and finally he was permitted to go in that fashion.

There is the construction put on this very language, applied to this very question by the oldest State in the Union, by a vote of 36 to 2. After a study of the Constitution and this phrase, which closely resembles the phraseology of our own Constitution, they applied it in the way that we are trying to say it should, in deference to the Constitution, be applied.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. McMASTER. I simply ask for information. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] asked this question yesterday. The question was answered, but I desire further information in regard to it. The Senator from Arkansas asked the question if one presented himself at the door of the Senate with credentials from his State to the effect that he had been duly elected, that there was no question about the election, no question as to fraud or corruption, but that the Senate had in its possession absolute evidence that the Senator elect had committed an act of treason, then would the Senator from Pennsylvania vote to administer the oath?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Clearly I would not, because the amendment to the Constitution establishes loyalty as one of the qualifications.

Mr. McMASTER. One further question was suggested here last spring by a Senator on this floor. Suppose a man came to the doors of the Senate with his credentials properly executed and it was discovered by the Senate that the man was violently insane, would the Senator then vote to administer the oath?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President; I would not.

Mr. McMASTER. Then I wish to call the attention of the laymen of the Senate to the fact that we have been led to believe here, by certain lawyers who have argued the constitutional question, that the only matters we can question in regard to credentials are the matters of age and residential qualifications. Now we discover that there are other things we can question; that if a man is guilty of an act of treason we can question that; that if a man is violently insane we can bar him at the door of the Senate. If we can bar him upon either of these two propositions, there are probably other matters in which the Senate would have equal right to bar him at the door of the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let me answer the Senator now. I would vote against admitting one proven to be guilty of treason because the very Constitution under which we exist makes that one of the disqualifications. Treason is a constitutional disqualification for a Senator elect. I would vote against the administration of the oath to a lunatic because it is obvious that the oath can not be administered to a lunatic. The taking of the oath involves the exercise of intellect. By the very terms of the Senator's question, the man is incapable of taking the oath. But if he had some other disqualification and if he was mentally competent to take the oath, I should vote in favor of his taking it.

May I say, in conclusion, that I think some of us are being led into error in this case by thinking too much of the individuals involved here. We are thinking too much about what is Mr. VARE's right or what is his liability. We are thinking too much about what are our rights or our duties. Can we not, for at least a moment, consider it from the other angle of the rights of that vast body of American citizens whose representative he is sent here to be? That is the important question. It is not the fate of any single one of us in this Chamber. That is relatively unimportant. What counts now and what will count in the future, when these precedents come back to haunt us, are the rights of those people, invisible to us in this Chamber, who are waiting anxiously our answer to that question of whether they can have the representation here which the Constitution promises them.

For 14 years WILLIAM S. VARE has served with credit in the other House of this Congress. How can we, without being absurd, say that the Senate can not permit him to sit in our sacred Chamber for 60 days?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator may.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator agrees we can not inquire into a man's private life, does he not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is my impression.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then why call attention to the good character of the man if that has nothing to do with it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because it is on this theoretical bad character that the Senator is proposing to bar himself from that taint for 60 days.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; nobody said anything about his character. The Senator twice stood here and told us the Senator elect could not contaminate the Senate, and nobody said anything about his character, good or bad. That is not a question involved here. The Senator has tried to argue that the man served with credit in the other branch of Congress. Does he think that adds anything to the question one way or the other?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think it shows that the Senate is becoming rather precious when it can not accept a Member from the other House.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator believe that question is involved in this vote?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I believe the question of fair play to Pennsylvania and to Mr. VARE is involved in this vote.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is not what I asked the Senator. Does the Senator believe the question of whether the Senator designate served in the other House has anything to do with this question here?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes, I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not know we had a right to inquire into that question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator wants to exclude that from his mind that is a different question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not think the Senator would concede that we had a right to inquire into that question. I never dreamed anybody would claim we could inquire whether he served with credit in another body.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. The fact that it does not affect the question at all is disclosed by the further fact that Mr. Lorimer served in the other House for an equally long period.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me see whether he can point out this distinction regarding the question which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] so clearly discussed this morning and which the Senator from Pennsylvania raised about the equality of representation of the States in the Senate. Is it any more unfair to deprive a State of equal representation by having an alleged Senator elect stand aside until the question as to whether he is the chosen representative of that State can be determined and whether he is qualified under the law and entitled to a seat, than it is after he has been sworn in and taken his seat and occupied his seat here for the Senate then to say upon inquiry that he was not duly elected and was not qualified and ought never to have presented his certificate here, and then to exclude him from the Senate? There must come an intermediate time between that action and the time when his place is filled either by appointment or by election. During that time the State is just as much deprived of its equal representation here, is it not, as it would be now if the Senator designate were not allowed to take his seat?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; but that interval may be very brief. It may be as little as an hour. If the governor is ready to make the appointment the instant the vacancy occurs, the vacancy may not last for more than an hour. But here deliberately we are planning to keep this question in suspense for 60 days where it is impossible to fill the vacancy and where, during that 60 days, matters vital to the welfare of the United States may be decided.

I have not tried to argue this matter on a partisan ground at all. I am not going to resort to personalities or talk partisan politics if I can help it. But let me call the Senators' attention to the way the country is going to look at this question.

At the present moment, thanks to the expulsion or suspension of Senator-elect SMITH, the Senate of the United States, including Mr. VARE, consists of 47 Democrats, 47 Republicans, and 1 member of the Farmer-Labor Party. The suspension of Mr. VARE from taking the oath means that the Democrats will be in the majority; they will have 47 Members, while the Republicans will have 46, although 48 Republicans have been elected to the Senate.

I do not charge that the Democratic Party is trying to steal the Senate, control its organization, and, more important than that, to control what it shall do this winter, but is not the country going to think so; and is not the fact that the balance of power hangs here by so slender a hair going to discolor the action of the Senate and make all men think now and in the long-distant future that the result of this vote in throwing the majority from one side of the aisle to the other was in the minds of the Senators who voted so to throw it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that, so far as I can say anything for this side of the Chamber, the question as to where the majority will rest after the action taken on the pending resolution is concerned does not in any wise enter into their course.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am not charging that it does. I hope the Senator will understand that.

Mr. FLETCHER. So far as I am concerned, my vote certainly will not be based upon any consideration as to whether the action taken shall give a majority to one side or the other. That is not the question involved at all.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the Senator from Florida will see that it is an unhappy time for us to establish a new precedent.

Mr. FLETCHER. We can not help that. We did not bring this trouble here. I could fill several columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with statements that would be startling in newspapers by prominent people in Pennsylvania with regard to this alleged election and in regard to the candidates that were before the people. I do not care to go into that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that as a part of my remarks this morning the briefs which I send to the desk may be inserted in the RECORD. These are the briefs that I mentioned when the discussion of the Vare matter began.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1927.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate:

Availing myself of this opportunity, I am submitting a pamphlet prepared by Hon. Harry A. Mackey, of the Philadelphia bar, who was campaign manager of the candidates on the combined Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket.

By way of illustrating the facts set forth by Mr. Mackey, I am submitting also—

1. A statement signed by all the Congressmen elect from Philadelphia County, certifying that their entire primary-campaign expenses were borne by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee.

Similarly, affidavits from members elect of the State senate and members elect to the House of Representatives of the State of Pennsylvania from Philadelphia County.

Similarly, affidavits from the members of the State committee from Philadelphia County, and an affidavit by Harry C. Davis as to the distribution of $50 to each of 1,465 election precincts in Philadelphia from the campaign funds of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee.

2. Sample ballot sent out to 425,000 prospective voters in the interest of all candidates in the various districts who were identified with the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket.

3. Sample watchers' certificates showing the legal form in which these watchers were appointed. In the Pittsburgh district petitions for overseers were presented to Judge Thomas Ford, who stated from the bench that he did not think overseers necessary, inasmuch as watchers would answer the same purposes. This is another illustration of the legal status and regular official character of the watchers.

4. A letter signed by WILLIAM S. VARE as typical of the letters sent out at his personal expense to the voters throughout Pennsylvania.

5. Typical letters sent out and included in "senatorial campaign expenditures," but which were in the interest of other candidates as well as Mr. VARE.

6. Samples of campaign advertising used by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee to get their candidates' messages to the more than 3,000,000 potential voters in Pennsylvania.

7. Circular showing leading business men's support of Mr. VARE.

8. A letter written by Rabbi Moses Shochet indicative of the fact that citizens from all walks of life were interested in Mr. VARE's candidacy.

9. Copies of the Progressive Labor World. Three different editions of this paper were widely circulated throughout Pennsylvania and the expense borne by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee.

10. Copy of Scranton Telegram showing the linking of the other candidates with Mr. VARE on the combination ticket.

11. Use of radio by Miss Beatrice Vare and speech as reprinted by the Progressive Labor World.

12. An argument on behalf of WILLIAM S. VARE, Senator elect from the State of Pennsylvania, submitted by Harold B. Beitler, Esq., and M. J. McEnery, Esq., of the Philadelphia bar.

THE FACTS ABOUT THE NOMINATION OF WILLIAM S. VARE, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA—HISTORY OF THE PENNSYLVANIA PRIMARY CAMPAIGN OF MAY 18, 1926

(By Harry A. Mackey, campaign manager for Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket)

FOREWORD

The only money expended for the personal primary campaign of WILLIAM S. VARE was the money used to circularize the voters of Pennsylvania. This form of expenditure is not limited and is legalized by both the Federal and the Pennsylvania statutes. Not one dollar of the $578,870.31 which was expended in the general State campaign was spent directly for Mr. VARE. This money was spent in the nomination of some 5,000 candidates, of which Mr. VARE was but one. This is proven by the evidence produced before the committee appointed by the United States Senate to probe these expenditures.

Mr. VARE's letter-writing campaign cost $71,435.80, which is the sum total amount that can be honestly charged as the cost of his personal campaign.

Irresponsible statements given newspaper publication are responsible for the spread of the misleading information broadcast to every corner of the country alleging that the nomination of Mr. VARE was secured by unfair means. It is to be hoped that the truth may now be given to the public.

Briefly, it has been falsely charged that:

1. A large "slush" fund was raised and expended to "buy" the nomination for Mr. VARE.

2. Employment of paid watchers was nothing but a subterfuge for vote buying.

3. Contributions were received in cash as well as by check, and money was disbursed in some instances by cash instead of by check, this fact being the basis for the insinuation that cash disbursements meant something "shady."

The facts are:

1. A large sum of money was raised and expended in behalf of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket. But it was not a "slush" fund. Every cent of it was honestly and legally expended and honestly and legally accounted for. The nomination of Mr. VARE was the result of an uprising against Volsteadism.

The best answer to the assertion that money obtained the nomination is the fact that Senator Pepper was defeated, although his campaign cost three times as much as the campaign of Mr. VARE. As an illuminating example, the Pepper expenditures in Philadelphia were two and one-half times that of the Vare ticket expenditures, while the Vare vote in Philadelphia was nearly three times that of the Pepper vote.

2. The Pennsylvania primary law, passed 20 years ago, legalizes the employment of watchers, and for 20 years it has been the custom for all candidates and all parties to employ them and to pay them. The assertion that the votes of these watchers were thus purchased was made by only one person, a Pinchot partisan, is an insult to the men and women who acted as watchers, and is utterly absurd.

3. Every dollar paid out in behalf of Mr. VARE was for a legitimate purpose and was accounted for in the proper way. Cash contributions were made to county organizations to prevent our opponents from knowledge of our movements prior to the primary, which they could have obtained had the transactions been by checks, as will be subsequently demonstrated. The proof that these transactions were honest is furnished by the fact that they were reported under oath at Harrisburg under the Pennsylvania law, had been entered in the books of the treasurer of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee and were exhibited before the investigting committee at Washington.

In the May primary the best men and women of Pennsylvania were enlisted behind one candidate or the other, the fight was openly conducted, and assertions that the nomination was a matter of barter can not be sustained by the slightest scintilla of evidence.

HARRY A. MACKEY,
Campaign Manager, Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward Ticket.

HISTORY OF THE CAMPAIGN

The nomination of WILLIAM S. VARE for United States Senator by the Republican Party of Pennsylvania on May 18, 1926, furnished a complete vindication of popular government.

Congressman VARE, when he announced his candidacy for Senator, faced an uneven battle. Arrayed against him were unlimited wealth, powerful political organizations in 65 of the 67 counties of the State, and nearly all of the newspapers.

Despite these great handicaps he emerged the victor in the bitterest primary contest in the history of Pennsylvania.

The Vare triumph was not solely a personal victory. It was an indorsement by the electorate of the platform upon which he sought the nomination and a tribute to his courage in taking a manly and unequivocal stand upon vital public problems.

RÉSUMÉ OF CONDITIONS

To really understand the obstacles which Congressman VARE faced a brief résumé of the conditions which confronted him when he announced his candidacy on March 15, 1926, will be necessary.

United States Senator George Wharton Pepper and Governor Gifford Pinchot had already entered the field. Senator Pepper had been conducting an active campaign for reelection for at least six months. Most of the newspapers of Pennsylvania, thinking in common with many of the important political factors of the State, that the contest for Senator would narrow down between Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot, had committed themselves to the former's reelection. The papers, as part of their campaign in the interest of Senator Pepper, denied for a considerable length of time any avenue of publicity to Congressman VARE.

They attacked him editorially and closed their news columns to his campaign.

Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury; Joseph R. Grundy, president of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association; and other powerful interests were conducting a vigorous campaign in the interest of Senator Pepper.

Their presence in the Pepper ranks brought to the aid of the senior Senator potential forces in every part of the State. Political organizations in the western Part of Pennsylvania, because of their allegiance to Secretary Mellon, stood firmly with Senator Pepper. In other sections of the State the Grundy forces were building strong local and county committees, and the dominant political organizations of the State, outside of Philadelphia and Dauphin Counties, were behind Pepper. The Pepper forces had unlimited money, and every avenue where they desired to spread propaganda in the interest of Mr. Pepper's reelection was open to them.

Behind the financial support and the newspaper aid was the powerful Republican organization of Pennsylvania, strengthened by Senator Pepper through Federal patronage.

Governor Pinchot was also a very formidable opponent. Four years ago, through a breach in the Republican Party and the expenditure of a large sum of money, Pinchot won the Republican gubernatorial nomination. He was subsequently elected as a result of support given him by regular Republicans who accepted the decision of the primary.

Mr. Pinchot has a great personal fortune. His family is also extremely wealthy. The fight of 1922 showed that the governor was ready to spend large sums of money to gratify his ambitions.

But besides his wealth, the governor had other resources. By virtue of his position as Governor of Pennsylvania, he had been enabled to build up a great political machine. Through patronage he had organizations in every county in the State. The passage by the 1923 session of the Pennsylvania Legislature of an act known as the "administration code" enabled him to appoint and fix the salaries of thousands of State employees.

In addition, Mr. Pinchot's position as governor and his facility for making lurid statements gave him "front page" publicity in the newspapers.

Governor Pinchot was a dry. The attitude of Senator Pepper was not made very clear during the campaign. He issued a statement placing himself in the Volstead group, but in various sections of the State his supporters put forth the information that advocates of modification had nothing to fear from him.

Congressman VARE in announcing his candidacy declared for modification of the Volstead Act.

The entry of VARE into the fight created consternation in the Pepper camp. Immediately he was attacked. The newspapers proceeded to ignore the issue of Volsteadism he had raised and attempted to make the issue "Vareism," so called. Those in charge of the campaign were soon convinced that they were to be the victims of a newspaper conspiracy of silence, so far as the issues were concerned, and that the only way to defeat this conspiracy and meet, in addition, the vast amount of paid publicity for Pepper was to launch an intensive publicity and advertising campaign. This meant the printing and distribution of literature, the use of the advertising columns of the newspapers of the State, of periodicals, programs, billboards, letter writing, and finally the radio.

THE ADVERTISING PROGRAM

Placards and window cards, platforms, and various other kinds of literature totaling almost 9,000,000 pieces were distributed throughout the State. Despite the great amount of literature put out a great many demands for printed matter had to be cut down and many orders remained unfilled when the campaign ended.

This entailed a great expense, but it was necessary. There was no other means whereby the voters could be informed.

It was then decided that some new method must be adopted so that the ticket's appeal could be carried directly to the people. The writer then resorted to the radio. Each night of the campaign messages were carried through the air to the voters of Pennsylvania, appealing to their sense of duty and urging them to think for themselves and give careful consideration to the platform upon which the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward candidates were seeking nomination.

THE RADIO

The people of Pennsylvania listened in on the radio. Nightly they heard the candidates and their manager. Reports received at the campaign headquarters showed that sentiment was increasing everywhere. The conspiracy of silence maintained by the big newspapers was broken.

NATIONAL INTEREST AROUSED

In this short space the importance of the Vare ticket and the great fight it was making against powerful interests attracted nation-wide interest. Great newspapers and magazines of the country outside of Pennsylvania sent special writers into the State to study the effect of the issue injected into the campaign. In every instance these experts upon national questions and public opinion predicted victory. These articles were in contradiction to the reports in Pennsylvania publications that the powerful machine arrayed against Mr. VARE would return Senator Pepper to Washington for another term. Notwithstanding these unbiased reports, based upon public sentiment, the newspapers of Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties continued up until the election to claim the nomination of Senator Pepper, and did not abandon their unfair attacks upon Mr. VARE.

It was after Mr. VARE'S victory that a cry of extravagant use of money in the Pennsylvania campaign was raised. Now, it is a well-known axiom that accusations in general terms are easy to make, require no specific proof, and, because of this, are exceedingly difficult to controvert. It is precisely this sort of campaign that has been waged against Mr. VARE with the United States Senate committee inquiry as the basis.

As a matter of fact, there was expended for the ticket headed by Mr. VARE'S chief opponent three times as much money as for the ticket headed by VARE, and yet this failed to "buy" the election, which establishes the honesty of Pennsylvania voters and election boards, and emphasizes the absurdity of the "slush" fund propaganda.

MONEY SPENT FOR MANY CANDIDATES

It must be recalled that the campaign of Congressman VARE was tied up with the candidacy of Edward E. Beidleman for governor, Arthur H. James for lieutenant governor, and James E. Woodward for secretary of internal affairs. With the exception of the money spent personally by Congressman VARE for letter writing, every cent used in the campaign was in the interest of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket.

At this point it is necessary to emphasize a situation which has apparently been overlooked. The forces allied with the Vare ticket conducted their campaigns throughout Pennsylvania under the name of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee. The fight was not for United States Senator alone but for a complete ticket.

A STATE-WIDE CONTEST

The fight made by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee was not made solely in the interest of these four candidates. Under tne name of this committee campaigns were conducted on behalf of very many candidates in the State. These included a candidate for Senator, a candidate for governor, a candidate for lieutenant governor, a candidate for secretary of internal affairs, 36 Members of Congress, 25 members of the Pennsylvania State Senate, 208 members of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, 113 members of the Republican State committee, and candidates in every section of the State for membership in county committees.

In Philadelphia the Republican organization supported 3,052 candidates, exclusive of the heads of the ticket, but including 7 Members of Congress, 4 members of the State senate, 41 members of the State house of representatives, 16 members of the Republican State committee, and 2,984 candidates for membership in the 48 Republican ward committees.

It, therefore, can be seen that the money spent by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket was not spent solely in the interest of Congressman VARE or any other individual candidate. Every dollar spent was necessary, and it was spent in the interest of the entire ticket.

VARE'S CANDIDACY DID NOT ADD TO USUAL COSTS

In Philadelphia, even if Congressman VARE had not been a candidate, it would have been necessary to have spent the same amount of money as was contributed to the various ward organizations. The maintenance of competent leadership in the 48 wards of the city was of paramount importance to the Republican Party of Philadelphia, and in addition to a ticket of 3,052 candidates the workers of the Republican Party had the responsibility of passing six loan bills aggregating $54,750,000 of vital concern to the city.

CASH CONTRIBUTIONS TO COUNTY COMMITTEES

Criticism has been directed at the method employed of making contributions to county leaders in cash instead of by check. In fact, those individuals who wish Mr. VARE harm and who realize that the purposes for which we expended money can not be successfully impugned, are laying great stress on this circumstance.

The truth is that these contributions had to be made in cash. Use of this method was the result of experience and forethought. If the campaign was to be fought over again, there could be no change in this method. Why?

We were fighting a powerful combination. Its long arm stretched into every nook and corner of the State. It was strongly intrenched in financial, banking, and business circles. These Pepper leaders set out to do two things in the way of organization—to sap our strength in Philadelphia, if possible, and to prevent us from building up an organization in the rest of the State. They failed in the first part of the program, but time and again, when I thought that I had a man picked for county leader in some section of the State, information would leak out, pressure would be applied, and we would lose the services of that man before he got started. In saying this I am not making charges of irregular practices, but simply emphasizing the fact that we were in a real fight and that no quarter was being given.

It was then determined that in selecting our county leaders we would safeguard our plans in every way until they were complete and working. A county leader would come to Philadelphia and be given the money in cash to open his headquarters and pay the necessary expenses of the campaign in his county.

It was vitally essential to make these contributions in cash. Checks deposited in small local banks would have inevitably disclosed our plans, and we were determined to prevent this. There was nothing shady about these transactions. The men to whom the money was given were well known in their communities and their characters and reputations were the best guaranty that the money would be honestly expended. The final proof that there was no other intention on our part is the fact that we accounted legally for these sums in our official report filed at Harrisburg under the corrupt practices act.

The campaign which Mr. VARE's managers conducted was in striking contrast to that of his opponents. At no time did Mr. VARE or those in charge of his campaign indulge in vituperation or make a personal attack upon either Senator Pepper or Mr. Pinchot. The VARE forces were battling for an issue—modification of the Volstead Act—and upon this issue they desired a referendum. The voters of Pennsylvania answered in no uncertain terms.

The official tabulation of the vote cast for United States Senator follows:

WILLIAM S. VARE	596,928
George Wharton Pepper	515,502
Gifford Pinchot	339,127

Examination of the expenses of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee will reveal that not one cent was spent for speakers. No compensation was given to the women affiliated with the campaign. Their services were voluntary. The bulk of the money was spent in advertising, as the following summary will show:

Advertising	$163,555.21
Dissemination of information	33,645.05
Printing	81,981.16
Postage	17,720.53
Pay roll (office force)	15,410.51
Headquarters (rent, supplies, and operating expenses)	13,532.86
Multigraphing	5,610.67
Office expenses	4,261.45
Traveling and transportation	3,463.14
Telephone and telegrams	3,427.05
Badges	165.00
Banners and bill posting	4,502.68
Personal expenses of WILLIAM S. VARE in letter-writing campaign	71,435.80
Contributions to county committees	231,095.00
Total	649,806.11

In arriving at the total of expenditures on behalf of Mr. VARE and his colleagues on the ticket, the effort has been made to increase this by adding sums that can not properly be thus credited.

For example, there was reported by the Beidleman-for-governor campaign committee the expenditure of approximately $120,000. This money was expended solely in Beidleman's behalf and can in no sense be charged to VARE, and yet it is included in the total given out from the Senate committee hearing. The Beidleman-for-governor headquarters were located at Harrisburg and were unknown to us until the account was filed.

There is also a sum of $16,000 expended by Ralph Beaver Strassburger, Norristown newspaper publisher, who voluntarily wrote to thousands of voters advocating Mr. VARE's nomination. He did this in aid of the cause Mr. VARE represented and without consultation with our committee.

STATE-WIDE ENTHUSIASM

As a matter of fact, Mr. Strassburger's act only emphasizes the widespread activity in Mr. VARE's behalf. This activity came from men and women in every part of the State and every walk of life. It was spontaneous and alive with the enthusiasm of a crusade.

The business men of Philadelphia rallied to Mr. VARE's support. In less than a week after Mr. VARE had announced his candidacy 7,500 business men pledged themselves in writing to work and vote for Mr. VARE's nomination. From these men, representing every form of enterprise in the city, was selected the William S. Vare Business Men's Committee of 100, composed of leading figures in the financial, commercial, and industrial life of Philadelphia. This committee also spent money in advertising in daily newspapers. The expenditures of this committee, approximately $7,800, was also unjustly charged against us. There undoubtedly were many public-spirited men and women who as individuals spent money in Mr. VARE's interest because of their interest in Congressman VARE and his platform, but these expenditures, like those of some prominent Philadelphia lawyers in writing to their clients urging them to support the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket, can not be charged to the campaign committee.

Mr. VARE's vote represented much that is finest in American spirit, and to charge that this splendid exhibition of political vigor was the result of a "slush" fund is an insult to thousands and thousands of patriotic men and women.

EXPLANATION OF EXPENDITURES

The advertising set forth in the above statement consisted of the placing of advertisements in leading newspapers throughout the State of Pennsylvania. Included in the item are also payments for advertisements in programs, souvenir booklets, and books printed and distributed by various organizations in Pennsylvania.

The charges for the dissemination of information include the cost of distributing special editions of various newspapers, the cost of reprinting articles favoring the ticket, preparation of literature and the remuneration of persons working in various sections of the State to acquaint the voters with the platform.

The printing bills cover the cost of printing nearly 9,000,000 pieces of literature.

The postage is for the sending out of various circular letters and mailing of literature.

The office pay roll, charge for the establishment of various headquarters, and office expenses embrace the cost of equipping the headquarters with furniture, purchase of office supplies, charges for envelopes, paper, twine, and other articles necessary for the shipment of literature, and the mailing of letters, together with the salaries of the mailing force and the shipping department.

The item for multigraphing is for the mailing by addressing companies of circular letters.

Telephone and telegraph charges are for the maintenance of communication between the central headquarters in Philadelphia with the leaders throughout the State and communications with the public at large.

Traveling and transportation charges are for the necessary expenses in traveling to and from Philadelphia and the cost of carrying speakers to various meeting places.

The badges were for the members of the Mothers' Committee, a group of public-spirited women who did magnificent work in the interest of the ticket. Not one of the women connected with this organization received any salary.

Mr. VARE's expenses were for the printing, addressing, and mailing of personal letters to the voters of Pennsylvania.

This explanation of the various items included in the summary shows that every dollar outside of the $231,095 distributed among the county organizations of Pennsylvania was spent for legitimate publicity.

As illustrative of the relative economies of the Vare and Pepper campaign committees, the expenditures of each in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties, and the vote of Congressman VARE and Senator Pepper are worthy of consideration. In Philadelphia Mr. VARE received 337,944 votes. Senator Pepper's vote was 113,969. The Vare ticket expenditure in Philadelphia was $73,250, and that of the Pepper forces $181,678. In Allegheny County Mr. VARE received 67,677 votes and the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward Allegheny County committee spent $108,053.72. Mr. Pepper received 80,436 votes and his State ticket spent $327,429.41.

NECESSITY FOR EXPENDITURES

The expenses of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee were small when consideration is given to certain facts. Pennsylvania is almost a nation in itself. It embraces 44,000 square miles. It has a population of more than 10,000,000, with approximately 4,000,000 men and women qualified to vote.

In order that the reader may have some conception of the mighty and intricate political problems and the cost of a primary election in Pennsylvania, it may be illuminating to present the following statistics. While I have said that Pennsylvania at this time has between 10,000,000 and 11,000,000 people, still the last authentic official census of all the States was in 1920. It is to be assumed that all the States have to some degree increased in population somewhat as Pennsylvania, but that census gives Pennsylvania's population as 8,720,017. The combined population of the five States, Missouri, Wisconsin, West Virginia, Utah, and Oregon, represented upon the investigating committee is, according to the last census, only 12,000 greater than that of Pennsylvania.

The 1920 census figures also show that the population of Pennsylvania is nearly 900,000 more than the combined population of 16 States now represented in the United States Senate by 32 Senators. These States are Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Maine, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, and Wyoming.

The citizenry embraces every nationality on the globe and is comprised of men and women engaged in every known form of human activity. There are hard and soft coal mines, great iron works, steel mills, oil wells, slate quarries, and, as a matter of fact, out of the soil of Pennsylvania over 600 different metals are taken to make for the progress of the world and the happiness of mankind.

Pennsylvania's soil is tilled by 227,000 farmers and 3,500,000 men and women occupy such relationship toward their employers that they come under the terms of the workmen's compensation act. Between the seven mountains of Pennsylvania have been mobilized Pennsylvania's millions of citizens with all of their community interests and with all of their various prejudices, so that when a man addresses himself as a candidate to all of these people he must be thoroughly understood and his declarations must be properly and intelligently conveyed to such an electorate.

Therefore money necessarily had to be spent in order to meet the demand of the people of the State for placards, pictures, platforms, and all literature that touched upon the main issue of Congressman VARE'S campaign.

To fully understand the problem which confronted those in charge of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign it is necessary at this point to digress for a moment.

THE VARE PLATFORM

It was on March 15, 1926, that Congressman VARE, who for 14 years had represented the first Pennsylvania district in the Congress of the United States, made public announcement of his candidacy for the office of United States Senator and submitted his name to the voters of Pennsylvania at the primaries that were to be held on May 18. At the same time he published his platform, upon which he asked the Republican voters to pass judgment. He declared his loyalty to the administration of President Coolidge, his adherence to the protective-tariff policy of his party, and then added the following:

"There is, in addition, another issue of great importance upon which I submit my candidacy to the voters of the Republican Party.

"An effort is being made to force the Republican Party into an extreme position on the great question of prohibition. If successful, it would sooner or later create a fatal breach in the party. Our party has always been in the truest sense a liberal party. It believes in temperance and moderation and in law and order, but it would be false to the great liberal principles upon which it was founded if it could be maneuvered into supporting the tyranny of many features of the Volstead law.

"I shall be opposed in the primaries by two candidates who believe in and would maintain the extreme rigor of the Volstead law. I do not believe that this represents the feeling of the majority of Pennsylvania Republicans of all classes, and it is fitting that this majority should be represented in the coming primaries by a candidate who believes the time has come to modify the excesses of a law which is eating like a cancer into the physical and moral life of the American people.

"Enforcement of the Volstead Act has failed. This fact is obvious to all and needs no argument. It has failed, in my opinion, because the law is not enforceable in its present form.

"In Pennsylvania our citizens have watched its operation, backed by the full authority of the State. They have seen money poured out by millions in the Nation. They have seen espionage of the most offensive character brought into practice, and all to what avail?

"Law enforcement is breaking down everywhere. The younger generation is subjected to moral dangers which are the direct outgrowth of this condition. These are not fancied evils. They are real and everyone knows it.

"If I am not greatly mistaken, the American people are tired of this condition and of the indefensible invasion of their just rights. The laborer, at the end of a weary day in the mines or factory, finds himself a criminal if he takes a glass of beer or light wine, and yet he knows that the more favored classes find little difficulty in having well-stocked wine cellars. Against this hypocrisy and inequality I protest. My candidacy will give an opportunity to the voters of Pennsylvania to expresse their views on this question.

"The people of this State have had full opportunity to test the value of extreme prohibition and they know the result. They were promised a reign of law and they find widespread lawlessness; they were promised a contented and happy people, and they find a people profoundly discontented and justly irritated; they were promised the improvement of public morals and, instead, they find the moral restraints of life broken down. Against this destruction of law and order and true temperance my candidacy will be a protest.

"The proponents of Volsteadism everywhere throughout the country present a unanimity of attitude which is enlightening. They admit, because they must, the failure of enforcement. Their remedy is more and greater appropriations and more and more laws. I believe the time has come to admit that the present law is not enforceable and to change it so that it can be enforced.

"I stand for the greatest amount of liberty for the people that is consistent with good government, and I am opposed to the enactment of laws which unnecessarily curtail and reduce that liberty. As a matter of helpful enforcement of the real principles of the constitutional amendment, I would advocate a law permitting the sale of light wines and beer.

"I am convinced that such a liberalization of the Volstead Act will not only remedy the conditions I have described, but will, in fact, promote true temperance.

"In this statement I am confident I express the honest sentiment of all well-informed, unbiased men and women who consider this subject with an eye single to the greatest good to the greatest number."

A WAVE OF POPULAR APPROVAL

The publication of the Congressman's attitude toward the Volstead Act immediately caused a great wave of popular approval to spread over Pennsylvania. The popularity of the Vare platform was so unmistakable that his opponents were convinced that drastic steps must be taken to overcome the sentiment of the people of the State and to make the issue a personal one against Congressman VARE rather than to undertake to squarely meet the issues that he had so clearly presented.

The Congressman in his platform expressed the thoughts of the great mass of the people of the State. His attitude upon the vital public problems was so in accord with the sentiment of the electorate that men and women who had always fought the Republican organization of Philadelphia rushed to his support.

I will discuss Congressman VARE'S Philadelphia support later, but I will dismiss the subject temporarily and will say that Mr. VARE'S candidacy appealed to all classes, rich and poor, high and low, foreign and native born, soldiers and workmen, enemies of the Volstead Act, liberal-minded men and women, business and professional men.

MEN AND WOMEN VOLUNTEERED SUPPORT

As evidence of this, approximately 300,000 signatures were obtained in about eight days, touching every county of the State, in order that Mr. VARE'S name might be placed upon the official ballot. The gathering of the signatures to the petitions represented the volunteer services of men and women throughout Pennsylvania who believed in him and his platform and who desired to demonstrate their approval of a public official who had the courage to stand upon his convictions.

This enthusiasm was also evidenced by the readiness with which business men announced their support of Mr. VARE'S candidacy. Within a week after Mr. VARE announced his candidacy there were received at his headquarters pledges of support in writing from 7,500 Philadelphia business men.

WOMEN ACTIVE FOR VARE

The women were also very active in Mr. VARE'S behalf, and to them belongs a great deal of credit for his victory. They realized that the Vare platform for modification of the Volstead Act offered the best means for the protection of the health and morals of the young men and women of the State.

The Vare campaign in Philadelphia was opened with a mass meeting of women. This meeting was called by Mrs. Henry Hall Sinnamon, chairman of the women's auxiliary of the Vare campaign committee. Mrs. Sinnamon was requested by me to obtain, if possible, the signatures of 5,000 women to an indorsement of Mr. VARE'S candidacy. In 48 hours 10,050 women signed a pledge promising to work and vote for the nomination of Mr. VARE.

During the campaign Mrs. Sinnamon held many meetings and her women workers distributed large quantities of literature in industrial plants, in theaters, and on streets.

In addition to the activities of Mrs. Sinnamon, Mrs. Blanche A. Bellak, another public-spirited woman and a gold-star mother, organized the mothers' committee of Pennsylvania. This organization appealed to women throughout the State to support Mr. VARE.

Neither of these committees had any paid workers or speakers and used no money in their respective campaigns.

THE ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Every newspaper in Pennsylvania that was unwilling to print the news of Mr. VARE'S compaign readily accepted advertising. The list of newspapers printed in this book shows that the advertisements were placed in newspapers in every section of Pennsylvania. It likewise shows that in addition to the English papers a great amount of advertising was done in the foreign-language newspapers. Advertisements were place in programs and in souvenir booklets of various organizations. Special editions of newspapers were distributed. Every means possible which would enable us to present the truth about the ticket were resorted to. If the expenses of this campaign were great, and they total less than one-third of the amount spent by the committees of Mr. VARE'S leading opponent, Senator Pepper, the fault does not lie with the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee but with the primary system.

All fair-minded people will agree that there was no other way, except in the manner the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee conducted its affairs, that the voters could be informed.

The only way in which these expenses can be cut is by re-forming the primary laws. There is no other way whereby the necessary expenses of a candidate who aspires for a public office in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania can be reduced.

Congressman VARE had no political organization wholly supporting him outside of the one in his own city. An appeal was made directly to the voter and the very meager and insufficient sum that the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee distributed throughout the counties was merely to interest high-minded men who would secure the services of a few watchers throughout the districts of the State to insure an approximately accurate count. I realized that in so short a time it would be futile to attempt to organize political contacts in 65 counties of the State that could successfully compete with the Republican organization of those counties.

Therefore I will place before the reader just what was done in the way of publicity, recognized as perfectly proper under the laws of the State and of the Federal Government. The act of Congress of 1925 fixed the maximum amount of money that a candidate for Senator could contribute to a political committee or committees in Pennsylvania at $25,000. But this same act accords the privilege to a senatorial candidate of spending an unlimited sum of money for letter writing, postage, and incidental personal expenses in a campaign.

Now, let it be understood that this law applies to the general election, and that there is no law upon the Federal statutes touching a primary, which is purely a State function. But Mr. VARE desired to live not only up to the letter but within the spirit of the law, and he governed himself just as though this act of Congress applied to a primary election. He did not contribute one dollar to a political committee for political purposes. He did spend his own money in letters, personally directed to the voters and signed by himself, as shown in the appendix. Neither the legality nor the propriety of this item of expense can be questioned.

In order to carry the fight directly to the people great publicity was necessary. There went out from our headquarters 8,590,800 pieces of literature, consisting of platforms, cards, booklets, circular letters, printed indorsements, sample ballots, three special editions of the Progressive Labor World and the Sunday Dispatch.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS

The newspapers very willingly accepted paid advertisements, so that through the Bloomingdale-Weiler Advertising Agency advertisements of the candidacy of our candidates appeared in the following newspapers throughout the campaign:

This advertising cost $27,712.74.

In addition to advertising in the papers listed by Bloomingdale & Weiler and by the Inter-Racial Press the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee advertised in the following papers, at a cost of $34,016.07:

Afro-American, Army and Navy Journal, Corriere D'America, Carbondale Leader, Express Worker, First Ward News, German Gazette, Germantown Review, Germantown Telegraph, the Gwizada, Il Progresso, Italo-America, Jewish Day, Jewish Morning Journal, Jewish World, La Guide Operia, La Liberta, L'Opinione, Monda Nuovo, Nanticoke News, National Industrial Review, the Observer, the Patryota, Pennsylvania Teacher, Philadelphia Herald, Philadelphia Public Journal, Philadelphia Publicant, Philadelphia Tageblatt, Pittsburgh Courier, Polish News, Progressive Labor World, St. Peter's Clavier, Scranton Telegram, the Southron, the Times, Traveling Elk.

PRINTING AND LITERATURE

The printing of cards, posters, platforms (in 14 languages), and sample ballots cost $92,806.38, divided among five Philadelphia printing houses, as follows: Marcus-Mayer Co., John R. McFetridge & Sons, the World Publishing Co., Paul W. Gibbons (Inc.), and the Dunlap Printing Co.

The item of postage alone was $17,720.53.

ECONOMY IN EXPENDITURES

Congressman VARE defeated Senator Pepper in Pennsylvania by a plurality of about 81,000. The Vare plurality in Philadelphia was 223,975; so that it was in Philadelphia that VARE won his fight.

The Philadelphia vote will, therefore, tell the story of Mr. VARE's nomination. It shows not that it was the product of a "slush" fund but that it was due to an uprising of the whole electorate of the city for VARE and against Volsteadism.

Examination of the vote in Allegheny County, given elsewhere in this account, shows that the same sentiment prevailed there and that VARE was heavily supported in all parts of the county except the organization wards of Pittsburgh, the organization in Pittsburgh being for Pepper.

THE PHILADELPHIA VOTE

Analysis of the Philadelphia vote furnishes the best evidence of the truth that the result in Pennsylvania was not due to the corrupt use of money and, in fact, was not influenced by money at all.

The Pepper ticket campaign in Philadelphia cost much more than the Vare ticket campaign, and yet VARE received in Philadelphia a plurality of 223,975 votes over Pepper. The Pepper campaign in Pennsylvania outside of Philadelphia cost more than did the Vare campaign, and Pepper obtained a plurality of the votes outside of Philadelphia. So that if the use of money brought about the result in the State outside of Philadelphia it certainly did not help VARE. Of course, the truth is that the tremendous Vare plurality in Philadelphia, which was the deciding factor in his nomination, was the fruit of the issue VARE represented and money had no effect upon it.

There are 48 wards in Philadelphia. Twenty-two of them may be fairly designated as strong organization wards. By this is meant that they are wards in which the Republican organization is usually the controlling factor. The remaining 26 wards are debatable territory in any vigorous contest. These include what are known as the independent wards, which are wards that ordinarily give antiorganization majorities whenever there is a strong independent movement on foot. In the primary election of 1926 VARE carried 47 of the 48 wards, losing only the twenty-second, which comprises Germantown, and that by a majority of but 1,649 votes. VARE's vote in this ward was 12,762, as against 14,411 for Pepper. He swept wards that an organization candidate rarely carries, and in some instances obtained majorities in independent wards that were truly astounding. In the 26 debatable wards he received 208,775 of the total of 337,994 votes given him in Philadelphia.

A REMARKABLE TURNOVER

In 1922, when Gifford Pinchot was a candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination against George E. Alter, Pinchot carried in the primary election nine Philadelphia wards, one of these, the eighth, being an organization ward whose leader turned in for Pinchot. The remaining eight were—the twenty-second (Germantown); the twenty-third (Frankford); the twenty-seventh, thirty-fourth, fortieth, and forty-sixth (all in West Philadelphia); the forty-first and the forty-second. These are independent wards. They gave Alter 37,332 votes and Pinchot 49,812 votes, a plurality for Pinchot of 12,480 votes. In 1926 these same eight wards gave VARE 75,525 votes and Pepper 55,443 votes, a plurality for VARE of 20,082 votes. This astounding turnover can not possibly be explained on the hypothesis that money was used to buy the election. There can be only one possible explanation for it, and that is that the people were aroused by the issue and responded to it.

Congressman VARE had declared against the Volstead Act in its present form in no uncertain terms, and in Philadelphia particularly, where the evils of Volsteadism are so plainly to be noted, the entire city turned to the leader in this movement. This is proved beyond doubt by a comparison with the result in 1922. In that primary Alter carried the city by a plurality of 87,100, the 22 organization wards enumerated above furnishing 69,468 of this plurality and the remaining 26 wards contributing but 17,632.

THE WATCHERS

There has been no greater misrepresentation in this whole matter than the unsupported charge that the employment of paid watchers in the primary election was only another method of vote buying.

To begin with, the Pennsylvania direct primary act legalizes the appointment of watchers in the following language:

(Act of 1906)

"SEC. 21. Each candidate shall be entitled to appoint two watchers at the primary in each election district, division, or precinct in which such candidate is to be voted for, who shall be qualified electors of the district, division, or precinct. Each watcher shall be provided with a certificate from the county commissioners, stating his name, the district in which he is authorized to act, and the name of the candidate appointing him, and shall have the right to remain in the room outside of the inclosed space. Watchers shall be required to show their certificates when requested to do so."

Including candidates for ward committees in Philadelphia, there were more than 3,000 regular Republican candidates, and each candidate under the law is entitled to two watchers for each district in which he was running. This would entitle the four State candidates alone to 11,936 watchers in Philadelphia, there being 1,492 election precincts. Ever since watchers have been legally recognized, it has been customary to pay them, on the theory that a man to be useful must leave his employment and is entitled to compensation when he does so. The attempt to make it appear that the payment of a watcher is a purchase of his vote is absurd on its very face, as no candidate would think of engaging a watcher of whose fidelity he was not absolutely assured. As a matter of fact, the more watchers there are at the polls the more certain it is that every candidate will get a square deal, and in this connection it might be pointed out that the Pepper-Fisher and the Democratic watchers in Philadelphia aggregated a total of 7,000. A watcher is appointed by the board of county commissioners, holds a certificate of appointment under the seal of the county, and has duties defined by law, many of which are equal to the rights of an election officer. He can challenge a voter, occupy a position in the voting place, and watch the count. It might also be pointed out that a minority inspector representing the Democratic Party is elected in each of the election divisions in the city and serves on primary election day as well as on the general election day.

In other words, every possible safeguard has been thrown about elections, and the entire absence of specific charges concerning the recent primary in Philadelphia emphasizes that it was honestly and fairly conducted.

Let me be emphatic in this matter of watchers. No man would hire an enemy to watch his property, and the thought is perfectly preposterous that the Republican organization of city or State would place certificates in the hands of doubtful voters to watch the integrity of the election.

"Watchers" and "workers" are synonymous terms in Pennsylvania. The issues involved in the election are thus explained. In Philadelphia, time and time again, these so-called "bell pullers" have so faithfully presented the issues of the campaign to the electorate that the newspapers have had no influence whatsoever. Time and time again the real issue in Philadelphia has been a test of the relative efficiency of the active worker, explaining the issues to the voters, as against the newspapers seeking to arouse the voters against the Republican Party by appealing to their prejudice through false statements and sensational publications.

These are the men who receive the watchers' certificates in Pennsylvania. In Philadelphia at the last campaign the Republican organization provided for five watchers or workers in each election precinct at $10 per day for just one day—election day. Under these circumstances is it not folly to imagine that this small sum, thus distributed, could unlawfully induce any voter to have supported the Vare ticket?

An inspection of the return sheet of Allegheny County will indicate the great rising tide of popularity of Congressman VARE's platform, where in the stronghold of the Mellon forces, fortified by a highly efficient political organization and with all the interests that the influential men behind the Pepper campaign could summon in his support, Mr. VARE carried the county with the exception of a few wards in the city of Pittsburgh, where the meager 12,000 majority was rolled up in behalf of Mr. Pepper. I consider the vote of Mr. VARE in this county as a tremendous popular indorsement, and I have no sympathy with any suggestion that would attack the integrity of the vote of our opponents in that county.

EXHIBIT A

CONGRESSMAN VARE'S PERSONAL EXPENSES

The personal expenses of Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE, as filed with the secretary of the Commonwealth at Harrisburg, Pa., shows a total expenditure of $71,435.80. This sum was expended by the Congressman in his State-wide letter-writing campaign, and the expenditures made were in conformity with both the United States and Pennsylvania laws governing elections. Copies of all of these letters were furnished by Mr. VARE to the senatorial investigating committee.

The itemized report of Congressman VARE's personal expenses follows:

THE PENNSYLVANIA LAW

Under the Pennsylvania law every expenditure made by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee was legal. Section 4 of the act of March 5, 1906, provides:

"No candidate, and no treasurer of any political committee, shall pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for any nomination or election expenses whatever, except for the following purposes:

"First. For printing and traveling expenses and personal expenses incident thereto, stationery, advertising, postage, expressage, freight, telegraph, telephone, and public messenger services.

"Second. For dissemination of information to the public.

"Third. For political meetings, demonstrations and conventions, and for the pay and transportation of speakers.

"Fourth. For the rent, maintenance, and furnishing of offices.

"Fifth. For the payment of clerks, typewriters, stenographers, janitors, and messengers actually employed.

"Sixth. For the employment of watchers at primary meetings and elections, to the number allowed by law.

"Seventh. For transportation of voters to and from the polls.

"Eighth. For legal expenses, bona fide, incurred in connection with any nomination or election."

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
Chairman Senate Investigating Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I respectfully ask permission to file my affidavit, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA COUNTY, ss:

Harry C. Davis, being duly sworn according to law, says that he is the executive director of the Republican Central Campaign Committee of the city and county of Philadelphia, Pa.; that during the recent spring primary he acted as an assistant to Thomas F. Watson, the treasurer of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward campaign committee in the distribution of campaign funds in the city of Philadelphia; that the said distribution consisted of $50 per election precinct in each of the 1,465 election precincts in Philadelphia; and that the said amount of money defrayed the campaign expenses of two Republican candidates for the office of ward committeeman in each of the said precincts, totaling 2,930 committeemen; and that the said candidacies were financed by the aforementioned committee and not by any other Republican committee.

HARRY C. DAVIS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 21st day of December, 1926.

[SEAL.] A. ALBERT BULMER,
Notary Public.

Commission expires March 3, 1928.

Four hundred and twenty-five thousand of these specimen ballots were sent out under 2-cent postage and containing a printed letter from Congressman VARE. At 6½ cents apiece, the cost of this particular campaign item would be $27,625.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 8, 1926.

Mr. ALBERT MODSELLO, Forks, Pa.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to call to your attention my candidacy for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate, to be voted for at the primary on May 18. You know how utterly impossible it is for anyone to cover any considerable part of the Commonwealth, even on a speaking tour, in the space of time allotted by law for campaigning, and it is only by this means I can reach the voter.

I was born in this State and have been a constant supporter of the Republican Party since my first vote was cast. During my 14 years in Congress as a Representative from the first congressional district I have advocated all measures embodying the principles of the party. I stand unqualifiedly by the policies of President Coolidge. I believe in legislation looking toward a sincere and true relief of the farmer, the upbuilding of education, the permanent improvement of our highways by the Commonwealth, and the maintenance of such a protective tariff that will insure steady employment to the people working in our railroads, mills, manufactories, and other industries.

I also stand for the greatest amount of liberty for the people that is consistent with good government, and I am opposed to the enactment of laws which unnecessarily curtail and reduce that liberty. As a matter of helpful enforcement of the real principles of the constitutional amendment and in order to promote temperance, sobriety, and the reestablishment of respect for the law and the courts I would advocate a law permitting the sale of light wines and beers.

I sincerely trust that you will be able to aid me in my candidacy by your vote and influence.

Very truly yours,

WM. S. VARE.

Typical letters sent out and included in "Senatorial campaign expenditures," but which were in the interest of other candidates as well as Mr. VARE.

(Veterans League of Pennsylvania, composed of soldiers, sailors, and marines favoring the nomination of Edward E. Beidleman for Governor of Pennsylvania)

4428 YORK ROAD,
Philadelphia, Pa., May 12, 1926.

MY DEAR COMRADE: It is with pleasure that I call your attention to the candidacy of Edward E. Beidleman for the Republican nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania. He is one of our good friends.

As a public official he has never refused any call to further the interests of the war veterans. Times without number he has appeared as the leading speaker at meetings and banquets of various military war organizations, and by his presence and effort has done much toward making such affairs a success in putting the veterans' organizations on a solid foundation.

Furthermore, he has given time and attention to helping veterans in the matter of compensation, vocational training, and insurance. This service he never charged for.

We should all support and vote for Mr. Beidleman because he has proven himself to be a friend of the veterans, and as Governor of Pennsylvania there is no doubt that he would continue this friendship.

Fraternally yours,

LEON FELDERMAN, M. D.,
Chairman Veterans League of Pennsylvania.

LAW OFFICES OF LADNER & LADNER,
1501 Walnut Street, April 19, 1926.

Mr. L. A. SCHRIVER,
Clearfield, Pa.

DEAR SIR: On May 18 we will have an opportunity to support WILLIAM S. VARE, a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States Senator, and Edward E. Beidleman, a candidate for governor of this State.

Moreover, we should feel it a duty to aid men whose abilities fit them for public office.

Both these men stand foursquare on every principle on which we stand.

People are ardently desiring a return to laws which do not strip them unnecessarily of their lawful and legitimate rights; these men will labor to bring these rights to us again. They are arrayed against the lawlessness which has grown out of the present-day conditions, they resent the tyranny of those who strike down our liberties, and will do their utmost to bring a return of at least a part of those liberties back to the people.

We owe a duty to ourselves and to our country to join in a movement that will bring this about. We can only do it by electing men who will advocate these principles.

Will you go to the polls on May 18 and cast your ballot for WILLIAM S. VARE and Edward E. Beidleman, and get others to do the same?

Faithfully yours,

ALBERT H. LADNER, Jr.

(Harry A. Mackey, campaign manager, 245 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.)

WILLIAM S. VARE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE,
Philadelphia, Pa., May 13, 1926.

Mr. THOMAS H. HARTER,
Bellefonte, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. HARTER: I am writing to you as one who is undoubtedly interested in the success of Hon. Edward E. Beidleman for governor.

May I say to you that his nomination will be brought about through the support that the Philadelphia Republican organization is giving him at the request of Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE, who is a candidate for United States Senator? Every vote polled for VARE in Philadelphia will likewise be given to Mr. Beidleman. The Philadelphia organization was never united as enthusiastically and working in such harmony as to-day. It will give Mr. Beidleman approximately 400,000 votes, which assures his nomination.

May I ask you to reciprocate? Is it not just a matter of plain political fairness with Mr. Beidleman receiving such great help from Philadelphia that Mr. VARE should receive corresponding help from Mr. Beidleman's friends in the State? This seems to me to be just a fair degree of political cooperation.

I am asking you, therefore, to give your personal vote and lend your personal influence to Mr. VARE, Mr. Beidleman, Mr. James, and Mr. Woodward.

With assurances of respect, I remain

Yours very truly,

H. A. MACKEY,
Campaign Manager for All of the Above Candidates.

(Council of Associated Building Trades of Philadelphia and Vicinity, Department American Federation of Labor. J. A. S. Bratton, president. Joseph W. Allison, secretary-treasurer. 1807 Spring Garden Street)

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 4, 1926.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I have been directed by the Associated Building Trades Council to forward to your local union the inclosed resolution and urge upon your organization to support the candidates mentioned therein to the fullest extent of your resources.

Fraternally yours,

———— ————, Secretary.

Resolution, Council of Associated Building Trades of Philadelphia and Vicinity

Whereas the American Federation of Labor, its executive council, labor officials representing all national and international unions, State federations, district and central councils, and local unions while testifying before the Senate committee on the modification of the Volstead Act, proved to any unbiased person the unreasonable and un-American aspect of the eighteenth amendment because it deprives the citizenship of the Nation of their inherent rights as guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and the mandates of common justice; and

Whereas the testimony of the labor representatives was clear and concise, presented in a sane and dignified manner on behalf of the millions of working men and women who resent the violations of their fundamental rights by the sumptuary legislation of the Volstead Act; and

Whereas in our great State of Pennsylvania the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator on the Republican ballot, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor on the Republican ballot, concur in the viewpoint of the officials and membership of the American Federation of Labor; and

Whereas the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator, and the Hon Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, have consistently and aggressively, during their public careers, fought, worked, and voted for and initiated legislation beneficial to the interests of the working people of our city and State, and at all times during their splendid public service concurred in the principles and policies of the American Federation of Labor in a manner which has attracted the attention of the workers of city and State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the courageous stand taken by the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, is in full accord with the stand taken by the American Federation of Labor and its associated bodies, and that the elements composing the American labor movement should enter the coming political contest in Pennsylvania having in view the slogan of our late great chieftain, Samuel Gompers, to "Support our friends and administer a stinging rebuke to our enemies," and thereby reveal the solidarity of organized labor by giving concentrated support to the position taken by the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, and we solemnly make this declaration: Human rights transcend the privileges of momentary political advantage: And be it further

Resolved, That the Associated Building Trades Council of Philadelphia and Vicinity, in meeting assembled, does hereby indorse the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senate, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor of Pennsylvania: And be it further

Resolved, In view of the long and splendid records both candidates have made during their public service in support of legislation favorable to the working people of city, State, and Nation, that we call upon the working people of the city and State to be on guard against the insincerity and sophistry in the campaign propaganda emanating from the opponents of the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, and we call upon the working people of the city and State to step forward and give these men their vote. Let labor's support be the largest and sanest contribution to the solution of this most vexatious problem which is menacing the very foundation of the American Republic, and the secretary is hereby instructed to forward this resolution to every union in the State of Pennsylvania affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

With the potential voting population of Pennsylvania of more than 3,000,000, the $650,000 spent by the combined campaign committee and myself in the interest of the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward ticket represented less than 20 cents for each vote sought. Figuring the expenditure for the approximate 600,000 votes actually recorded for me, the $650,000 represented about $1.08 a vote. Twenty cents per vote to educate; three-quarters of which was spent on advertising and letters.

TYPICAL "COMBINATION-TICKET" ADVERTISEMENT ILLUSTRATING LEGITIMATE PUBLICITY EXPENDITURE FOR OTHER CANDIDATES, BUT CREDITED AS VARE EXPENSES

REPUBLICAN VOTERS OF PENNSYLVANIA: THE REGULAR REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATION OF PHILADELPHIA WILL SUPPORT THE FOLLOWING CANDIDATES AT THE PRIMARY ELECTION, TUESDAY, MAY 18. WILLIAM S. VARE FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR; EDWARD E. BEIDLEMAN FOR GOVERNOR; ARTHUR H. JAMES FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR; JAMES F. WOODWARD FOR SECRETARY OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS

We, the representatives of the Republican Party in the city of Philadelphia, desire at this time to publicly make known to our fellow voters throughout Pennsylvania our exact stand on the candidates for the several offices to be voted for at the primary election on Tuesday, May 18.

In adopting this method of sending our message to fellow Republicans we do so in a spirit of friendliness and good will. We owe it to ourselves and to you to make known in a definite way our choice for nomination to the important offices of United States Senator, governor, lieutenant governor, and secretary of internal affairs.

The registered Republican vote in Philadelphia is over 575,000. Based on past primary elections it is only fair to estimate that of the vote cast in Pennsylvania next Tuesday approximately 40 per cent will be cast in the city of Philadelphia. This fact, known to all political leaders in Pennsylvania, has impelled politicians interested in this or that candidate to spread false reports about the probability of a split in the Philadelphia organization; has even caused newspapers to fall into error as to what Philadelphia is going to do at the polls on Tuesday, and has led to false claims and false hopes by candidates not favored by the regular Republican organization of the city of Philadelphia.

We are for WILLIAM S. VARE for United States Senator because he is a man of the people; he has the courage of his convictions; he does not dodge, side-step or equivocate on any great question; he stands squarely pledged to do his utmost to modify the Volstead Act, which every thinking man and woman knows has brought domestic and social ruin and destruction in its wake; he has served seven terms in Congress at Washington and is experienced in legislative work; he has conducted a clean campaign and has not stooped to scurrilous tactics and misrepresentations; he is a man who if sent to Washington as your Senator will never serve a so-called interest; he voted for the nomination of President Coolidge as a delegate to the Republican National Convention and has always stood with the President; he is a good, loyal Republican.

We are for Edward E. Beidleman for governor because he knows no boss; he is qualified for the position of governor of this great Commonwealth; he gave the people of Pennsylvania splendid service as a member of the house and senate at Harrisburg and as lieutenant governor; he is human and always voted for and fought for humane legislation; he is an executive and leader; he will be governor of all the people and will favor no class or set of men to the detriment of other citizens of the State; he came from an humble beginning and is self-made in the truest sense of the word; he is honest and pledges a progressive and economical administration.

We are for Arthur H. James for lieutenant governor because he is fearless and unafraid; he has made an extraordinary record as district attorney of Luzerne County; he won a reelection to that office by the largest majority ever given a candidate in that county; he began life as a breaker boy in his home town at Plymouth, Pa.; he resides in a county that has not had a Republican nomination for a State office since 1879, notwithstanding the fact that it is the third largest county in the Commonwealth, with a voting population alone of over 150,000; he will make an ideal presiding officer of the State senate, and his experience as district attorney peculiarly fits him for membership on the board of pardons.

We are for James F. Woodward for secretary of internal affairs because he has given competent service to the people during his administration of that office; he has made the position of secretary of internal affairs a valuable part of the State government; he has introduced new methods for the securing of statistical facts that are invaluable to the people of the Commonwealth and the country at large from the standpoint of necessary information; he is a resident of the great county of Allegheny, which is entitled to representation on the Republican State ticket.

The above are a few of the many good reasons why we, the duly recognized and accredited representatives of the Republican Party in the city of Philadelphia, are for WILLIAM S. VARE for United States Senator, Edward E. Beidleman for governor, Arthur H. James for lieutenant governor, and James F. Woodward for secretary of internal affairs.

Thomas F. Watson, president twenty-second ward; Peter E. Smith, vice president forty-seventh ward; Rebecca E. Sinnamon, vice president; James B. Sheehan, secretary twelfth ward; James J. Connolly, secretary twenty-fifth ward; Clara B. McCandless, assistant secretary; Henry C. Davis, executive director; John J. McKinley, jr., treasurer thirty-third ward; John F. Dugan, twenty-seventh ward; James Irvin, forty-eighth ward; N. Edwin Lindell, forty-first ward; Charles R. Love, sixth ward; Harris Kirby, fifteenth ward; Charles Semple, forty-sixth ward; H. D. Beaston, fortieth ward; Edward J. Cooke, eighth ward; Max Mayer, thirteenth ward; Ferd G. Zweig, seventeenth ward; Sigmund J. Gans, thirty-eighth ward; Charles B. Hall, seventh ward; Oscar E. Noll, thirty-seventh ward; George E. Rowland, forty-second ward; James A. Carey, fifth ward; Harry C. Ransley, second ward; Benj. H. Fields, twenty-fourth ward; Joseph Marcus, twentieth ward; Joseph H. McArdle, sixteenth ward; C. Walter Glasgow, forty-eighth ward; Isaac D. Hetzell, eighteenth ward; Charles L. Sommers, first ward; Richard Weglein, twenty-ninth ward; Frank L. Kenworthy, twenty-first ward; Edw. T. Tennock, thirty-fourth ward; Joseph J. Kelly, forty-fourth ward; Alfred M. Waltron, thirty-first ward; Aaron Samuel, thirty-ninth ward; D. Frank Black, forty-third ward; Fred Schwarz, jr., forty-fifth ward; Henry J. Trainer, third ward; Arthur Sellers, thirty-second ward; David T. Hart, twenty-third ward; Clarence K. Crossan, thirty-fifth ward; James M. Neely, ninth ward; T. Crawford Cook, thirtieth ward; Wm. S. Vare, twenty-sixth ward; Milton H. Reedensoyer, twenty-eighth ward; Thos. W. Cunningham, tenth ward; Matthew Patterson, nineteenth ward; Sam'l W. Salus, fourth ward; Wm. F. Nickel, jr., eleventh ward; Jno. M. Larish, fourteenth ward; Frank J. Ryan, thirty-sixth ward.

Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward.

This is a sample of the expensive advertising put out by the Pepper-Fisher managers and which we were obliged to meet by similar paid newspaper advertisements.

Attention is again called to the fact that the newspapers of Pennsylvania were supporting Mr. VARE's opponent, so that paid advertising was the only form through which he could get his campaign arguments into the newspaper columns.

"The issue of this campaign is definite, clear-cut, blazoned before the public as though in words of fire—Vareism.

"The effort of a down-town political boss to grab control of the Republican Party of Pennsylvania and through his candidate for governor—Beidleman—to fasten the grip of contractor-government, of commercialized politics, upon the administration of the State and the public treasury. The senatorial candidacy is but a phase of the plan. The so-called "wet" issue is only a blind.

"Political exploitation is the real aim—power—patronage—contracts.

"VARE seeks the senatorial nomination in order to gain the State leadership, and he supports Beidleman in order to have his own governor at Harrisburg.

"Against this monstrous attempt to get control of the State government and its patronage, and especially the putting of the splendid new highway system into the hands of a plunderbund, John S. Fisher is making his fight.

"His constructive legislative record, his admirable administration of the State banking department, and his great work in organizing the good-roads movement have had their effect in the minds of the voters.

"Just as Senator Pepper has done, he has swept the State down to the Philadelphia line.

"Philadelphia is the final and decisive battle ground.

"Here the fight will be fought and won, and representative government will be sustained, or the result on May 18 will record one of the most humiliating defeats ever suffered by American citizenship.

"The decision is in your hands. On the Philadelphia vote everything depends.

"The true sentiment of the Republicanism of Philadelphia is against ballot stuffers, against fifth-ward murders, and against VARE. Let that sentiment record itself in the primary election May 18.

"With Philadelphia Republicanism voting full strength it will be shown on primary day that Philadelphia is for—

"Pepper for Senator, Fisher for governor, Smith for lieutenant governor, Woodward for secretary internal affairs.

"This is the ticket, and for it every vote is needed. Let every registered Republican in Philadelphia work and vote—for the Pepper-Fisher ticket.

"Crush contractor government.

"Pepper for Senator. Fisher for governor. W. W. Roper, chairman campaign committee, 1424 Chestnut Street; Alba B. Johnson, chairman campaign committee, 606 Finance Building."

VOTE VARE! VOTE VARE! CANDIDATE FOR REPUBLICAN NOMINATION FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR—PRIMARY ELECTION TUESDAY, MAY 18

DON'T BE MISLED

Don't be fooled by empty words and pussyfooting phrases.

There is only one big issue—for Volsteadism or against Volsteadism. I am 100 per cent against Volsteadism—and am committed to its modification.

In 1776 a group of loyal Americans signed a Declaration of Independence and threw off the yoke of tyranny.

For United States Senator: WILLIAM S. VARE.

Let history repeat itself next Tuesday. Put a cross opposite my name—sign your own declaration of independence—and "Give an American his rights."

WM. S. VARE,
Candidate for Republican Nomination for United States Senator,
Primary Election Tuesday, May 18.

WHAT IS VAREISM?

It is the habit, in many political campaigns, to sling mud at the other fellow. It is always a dirty trick—and is invariably an acknowledgment of impending defeat on the mud-slinger's part.

"Vareism" has been used by the political opponents of Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE as a term of reproach. Let the pictures on this page tell you a truer story.

What the word "Vare" stands for is shown here in stone and brick and mortar—monuments of unselfish endeavor directed for the good of the community.

There is the Abigail Vare Methodist-Episcopal Church, dedicated to the memory of Congressman VARE's mother—and across the street from it is the Abigail Vare Public School. Then there is the E. H. Vare Junior High School, and the George A. Vare Playgrounds.

A church—a school where the foreign-born are Americanized—a high school that better fits the boys and girls for the duties that await them—a playground where sunshine and fresh air give new life to pent-up children in congested districts. These four contributions to a community's well-being represent what "Vareism" really means!

Congressman VARE refuses to answer the vindictive slurs directed against him. And so it devolves upon his campaign committee to publish this advertisement telling you just exactly what "Vareism" means, and to ask you on May 18 next to vote for the man who, when he is Senator, will work to his uttermost to "Give an American his rights."

THE WILLIAM S. VARE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

HON. WILLIAM S. VARE

CANDIDATE FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR

Every war veteran, war widow, and dependent child knows him as their friend.

Look at Pepper's antisoldier record.

Senator Pepper's vote on May 13, 1924, was against the relief of Civil War and Spanish War veterans and their widows. They were thrown down by Pepper's deciding vote, the man who is now asking your support for reelection.

See page 8676 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 13, 1924, first session Sixty-eighth Congress.

Pepper also voted against the soldier's bonus. VARE voted for the soldier's bonus.

Vote for WILLIAM S. VARE at the primary election, May 18, 1926.

His record and votes have always been favorable to the soldiers of all wars.

(Thirty thousand of these circulars were printed and sent out in addressed envelopes under 2-cent postage.)

TALMUD TORAH ADATH JESHURUN, Philadelphia.

DEAR FRIEND: In the State of Pennsylvania we are now much interested in the coming election of a worth-while man to represent the people of Pennsylvania in the United States Senate.

Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE is one of the candidates, and it is about him I want to tell you.

I have known Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE for over a period of years, and during all that time I have never met one who was so close to the hearts of the people as Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE. He was a poor boy who became a public figure by reason of his hard work and his continual service to the people he represented. No issue was too small for him to give his time, his efforts, or his money. He was never afraid to speak or vote as he felt was best for the people. He was always one of the plain people and was never ashamed to acknowledge it or show it.

When he felt that the immigration bill was wrong he voted against it. He was not afraid to express his views.

To my mind he always has and always will represent the people—not the interests of corporations. For these reasons he should be elected as Senator from Pennsylvania, and as a personal favor to me and for the good of the people I want you to vote for him, help elect him, get your neighbors and friends to vote.

His election means that the people of Pennsylvania will have a people's choice as Senator.

Very truly yours,

Rabbi MOSES SHOCHET.

TRADE-UNIONISTS HAVE CONFIDENCE IN BEIDLEMAN AND VARE; ASSOCIATED WORKERS INDORSE TICKET—COUNCIL OF ASSOCIATED BUILDING TRADES AND OTHER CRAFTSMEN PLEDGE ALLEGIANCE TO "FRIENDS WHO HAVE STOOD BY UNIONS"—INDORSE CANDIDACIES OF VARE AND BEIDLEMAN AND URGE ALL WORKING PEOPLE IN CITY AND STATE TO GIVE THEIR HEARTIEST SUPPORT IN THE PRIMARIES—LABOR THE BIG FACTOR IN VITAL CONTEST—RESOLUTION CALLS UPON TRADE-UNIONISTS OF CITY AND STATE TO FOLLOW SAMUEL GOMPERS'S ADVICE, "SUPPORT OUR FRIENDS AND GIVE A STINGING REBUKE TO OUR ENEMIES"

WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for the United States Senate, and Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, in the primaries, have reason to be proud of the reception and ovation they got Monday night in Musicians' Hall, 120 North Eighteenth Street, from trade-unionists assembled in mass meeting.

The warmth of their welcome and indorsement visibly affected both candidates, and Harry A. Mackey, chairman of the Vare campaign committee, was jubilant when the significance of the ovation dawned upon him. The sentiment expressed at the meeting under the auspices of the Council of Associated Building Trades is indicative of labor's sentiment for VARE and Beidleman throughout the city and State.

When a delegation of unionists led the distinguished guests to the platform the entire meeting arose and stamped, cheered, and applauded most spontaneously for at least three minutes. The speeches of Congressman VARE and former Lieutenant Governor Beidleman were punctuated with heavy applause. When both candidates ended their talks they were again the recipients of another ovation.

It was a most auspicious night for the candidates. It was a happy night for the aroused trades-unionists. It shows the trend of labor's political thinking. It revealed the beginning of the end for the Pinchot, Pepper, Fisher ambitions.

Edward E. Beidleman is admittedly the best "vote getter" in the State, as concerns organized workingmen and women. All during his public career he has worked hard, sincerely, and intelligently for legislative measures offering betterment to the workers. Under any and all circumstances Mr. Beidleman has been fair and friendly to labor. Labor is now manifestly eager to reciprocate that faithfulness and friendliness.

Congressman VARE is in the same class as Beidleman. Any important piece of remedial legislation affecting the workers' welfare has found Congressman VARE at hand to lend support. His interest in labor legislation has been always on a par with that of the former lieutenant governor. Labor is aware of the "labor records" of both candidates and enthusiastically wants to pay the debt.

The mass meeting was probably the most successful meeting of its kind staged in the city for decades. It shows which way the political winds are blowing.

At the conclusion of the speeches of Messrs. Beidleman and VARE the following resolution was unanimously adopted by a standing vote amid a clamor of wild enthusiasm which made the candidates smile from ear to ear. They had cause to smile. Organized labor of this city gave them a tribute of confidence never before bestowed on candidates for political preferment.

[The resolution council of Associated Building Trades of Philadelphia and vicinity]

Whereas the American Federation of Labor, its executive council, labor officials representing all national and international unions, State federations, district and central councils, and local unions, while testifying before the Senate committee on the modification of the Volstead Act, proved to any unbiased person the unreasonable and un-American aspect of the eighteenth amendment because it deprives the citizenship of the Nation of their inherent rights as guaranteed by the bill of rights and the mandates of common justice; and

Whereas the testimony of the labor representatives was clear and concise, presented in a sane and dignified manner on behalf of the millions of working men and women who resent the violation of their fundamental rights by the sumptuary legislation of the Volstead Act; and

Whereas, in our great State of Pennsylvania, the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for the United States Senate on the Republican ballot, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor on the Republican ballot, concur in the viewpoint of the officials and membership of the American Federation of Labor; and

Whereas the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, have consistently and aggressively, during their public careers, fought, worked, and voted for and initiated legislation beneficial to the interests of the working people of our city and State and at all times during their splendid public service concurred in the principles and policies of the American Federation of Labor, in a manner which has attracted the attention of the workers of city and State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the courageous stand taken by the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, is in full accord with the stand taken by the American Federation of Labor and its associated bodies and that the elements composing the American labor movement should enter the coming political contest in Pennsylvania, having in view the slogan of our late great chieftain, Samuel Gompers, to "Support our friends and administer a stinging rebuke to our enemies," and thereby reveal the solidarity of organized labor by giving concentrated support to the position taken by the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for United States Senator, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, and we solemnly make this declaration: Human rights transcend the privileges of momentary political advantage; and be it further

Resolved, That the Associated Building Trades Council of Philadelphia and vicinity, in meeting assembled, does hereby indorse the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, candidate for the United States Senate, and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania; and be it further

Resolved, In view of the long and splendid records both candidates have made during their public service in support of legislation favorable to the working people of city, State, and Nation, that we call upon the working people of the city and State to be on guard against the insincerity and sophistry in the campaign propaganda emanating from the opponents of the Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE and the Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, and we call upon the working people of the city and State to step forward and give these men their vote. Let labor's support be the largest and sanest contribution to the solution of this most vexatious problem which is menacing the very foundation of the American Republic, and the secretary is hereby instructed to forward this resolution to every union in the State of Pennsylvania affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

VARE AND BEIDLEMAN TICKET WILL SWEEP COMMONWEALTH DESPITE THE FEVERISH CLAIMS OF THEIR OPPONENTS—RALLY AT THE ELKS SHOWS BEIDLEMAN AND VARE FORCES SPLENDIDLY UNITED; DEMONSTRATION SPELLS A SURE VICTORY—CHAIRMAN MACKEY AND HIS ASSOCIATES JUBILANT AT THE TREMENDOUS TURNOUT OF PARTY WORKERS, LABOR CHIEFS, AND OTHER LOYAL G. O. P. VOTERS—A RALLY THAT WILL BE HISTORIC—CHAIRMAN MACKEY SCATHINGLY TROUNCES THE DAILY NEWSPAPERS OF THIS AND OTHER CITIES FOR THEIR PARTIAL HANDLING OF POLITICAL NEWS OF THE DAY

For United States Senator, WILLIAM S. VARE; for governor, Edward E. Beidleman.

That's just about the way the primary elections are going to make the Republican ticket read.

The above is evidenced by the Vare-Beidleman political rally at the Elks Club Monday night. Five thousand enthusiasts tried to jam their way into the spacious Elks ballroom. At least 4,000 jammed their way in. The rest stood around the clubhouse for hours after the meeting started, hoping for a chance to break into the big show.

It was the greatest political rally in the history of the G. O. P. in Pennsylvania. There was a zeal in the meeting few meetings really have. At times the roof seemed to quiver from the applause and cheers.

The galaxy of ward leaders flanking Congressman VARE and former Lieutenant Governor Beidleman was most impressive. It was an evidence that the organization is intact for their candidacies. The political chieftains gave assurance that they are in the fight to give all they have for success.

When "Bill" Campbell, big chief of the twenty-fifth ward, made his little talk for the ticket the auditors knew that it was "all over but the shouting." The cheers were deafening when "Billy" threw down his challenge to the "reformers."

When Beidleman hit the high spots of his tremendous oratory, the house was full of thrills. His denunciation of the tricks of his opponents, his espousal of the cause of the common people, his direct shots at the hypocrisies of the campaign, his reference to the fight between the House of Have and the House of Want, electrified his hearers. There is no question where they stood for "Eddie" Biedleman.

When "BILL" VARE stepped forward to make the "best speech" of his career the yelling could be heard in "Andy" Mellon's mansions in Pittsburgh, Washington, and Miami. The reception given VARE made his cheeks flush with a justifiable pride. It was made apparent that VARE's leadership is based on his proximity to the ordinary fellow.

The senatorial candidate was in fine fettle. He jabbed, punched straight, right-crossed with a dexterity that was a delight to the big crowd. VARE's speech was more effective than are the highly polished oratorical efforts of his erudite opponents—an erudition which the anti-Vare campaign managers clumsily advertise.

It is always poor policy to brag about one's education. The Fisher-Pepper campaign managers constantly brag about the Fisher-Pepper education. That bragging has had a reaction. The common people who are not college bred resent such stuff and turn against the Fisher-Pepper combination. Fisher-Pepper camps should hire new campaign managers. The ones in charge are messing up the camps. They possess a positive genius for handling dirt, but they are mentally slow when it comes to political tactics which mean votes.

BAKER SITS IN THE FRONT ROW

A most conspicuous figure at the big rally was Harry Baker, chairman of the Republican State committee. His appearance was rightly interpreted as meaning that Baker refuses to have anything to do with the Fisher-Pepper-Grundy-Mellon aggregation. Baker always stands with those who are Republicans all of the time, not only when times are opportune. Baker was the cynosure of all eyes. His presence was eloquent of the fact that the organization goes into the final rounds of the senatorial and gubernatorial fight trained and united and confident of victory.

Harry J. Trainer—long an opponent of the Vares—won a big hand for himself when he was toted to the center of the stage. He smiled broadly and asserted his ward would be in the line-up against the common enemy.

A large group of labor chiefs also won a big round of applause when they took their seats on the Vare-Beidleman platform. The entrance of the labor chiefs made Chairman Mackey smile the smile that can't be rubbed off. Mackey knows that with labor back of the Vare-Beidleman ticket the ticket can't be licked.

Mackey's labors at the mass meeting had the fabled labors of Hercules and Atlas backed off the boards. He worked as no campaign manager ever worked before. He's a human dynamo. His legs were tottering, his hands shaking, his voice shot to bits, but he struggled through his difficult rôle like a true martyr to the faith. He has distinctly won his spurs—golden spurs—as a campaign manager. His astute handling of the meeting and everything incidental to the Vare-Beidleman campaign has been nothing less than marvelous.

Mackey gave inside information that made the big crowd sit up and take notice. Telegrams, messages, letters, etc., poured into the meeting from the highest and lowest in the State. Big names and modest names offered their backing to the ticket. It was a great show. It was a great night.

Mackey, like VARE and Beidleman, stressed the important fact that the fight is between the "common people and the aristocracy of money." Such drawing of the lines of battle brought the big crowd to its feet. It senses a something in the campaign that no G. O. P. campaign ever before possessed. It was a new note. The truth of it struck home. It's a big card in the Vare-Beidleman deck.

Congressman MORIN, of Allegheny County, was another orator who went big with the crowd. He placed the real facts of the Pittsburgh salient before the crowd. He nullified all the rosy Pittsburgh reports put out so assiduously by the Pepper-Fisher press agents. MORIN said: "Just watch our county repudiate the Mellons and the Leslies."

Congressman VARE put it over big by his direct way of treating the big issue of the fight. He scored heavily when he proved his allegiance to President Coolidge. He was a riot when he asserted he stood with his own class of people against the special interests that want to dominate Pennsylvania and the Nation.

Beidleman, too, played his four aces and his deuce of spades when he said he wanted to be governor so that he could carry on the remedial legislative work for the common people of the State.

The interests of the State don't want Beidleman in that gubernatorial chair. They know he is too close to the men and women who have to toil hard for their bread and butter. His sympathies are too near the people—his own class—to suit those who would profit by controlling the functions of government.

It was a great mass meeting.

It was an inspirational G. O. P. night.

It was indicative of which way the Pennsylvania political winds are blowing.

It means that WILLIAM S. VARE is going to be the new United States Senator.

It means that Edward E. Beidleman is going to be the next Governor of Pennsylvania.

It means that the people—the ordinary people—are fully aroused and mean to make Pennsylvania a Commonwealth of, for, and by the people.

Which, of course, means the square deal for all.

Which, naturally, is a good meaning for progress and prosperity and justice.

SWEEPING VARE VICTORY IS PREDICTED—MACKEY ASSAILS MELLON'S CLAIM FOR PEPPER SUPPORT—NEXT UNITED STATES SENATOR GIVEN ROUSING RECEPTION BY ADHERENTS OF "DRY" MODIFICATION AT ELKS CLUB—HON. WILLIAM SCOTT VARE, HON. ARTHUR JAMES, AND HON. HARRY A. MACKEY IN STAIGHT-FROM-THE-SHOULDER SPEECHES, TEAR DOWN WEAK DEFENSE OF OPPONENTS HIDING BEHIND MELLON WEALTH AND FANATICAL ILLUSIONS—GREAT VICTORY PREDICTED FOR CNOGRESSMAN AND HIS ENTIRE TICKET—CAMPAIGN OPENS IN EARNEST WITH SUCCESS THE ONLY GOAL

If there was ever any doubt as to how strong Congressman WILLIAM SCOTT VARE is in Lackawanna County that doubt was dispelled last night at the Elks Club when the Congressman, together with his campaign manager, Harry A. Mackey, and District Attorney Arthur James, of Wilkes-Barre, candidate for lieutenant governor, in the best group of political speeches ever heard by a local audience, waded into the candidacies of Senator George Wharton Pepper and Governor Gifford Pinchot, both opposing Mr. VARE for the office of United States Senator in such an honest, sincere manner that will lead to but one conclusion when May 18 rolls around—victory.

It was indeed a Vare-Beidleman-James night and the affair, attended by Republicans from every nook and corner in the county, spells nothing but success for the candidates who are carrying their appeal to the doorsteps of the homes of the plain people of the State.

One of the best speeches of the night was that of Hon. Harry A. Mackey. The latter, a graduate of the great Vare school of politics, told of the wonderful organization headed by VARE in Philadelphia, and who, in words that rang with the spirit of liberty and independence, resented the attacks that the moneyed interests of the State have made upon the man whose love for the plain people has made the name of VARE loved by the plain people of his native city.

Hon. Edward E. Beidleman, candidate for governor, was expected to speak here last night, but having attended a session of the State firemen at Norristown yesterday was unable to get to Scranton.

Arthur James, aspirant for the nomination for lieutenant governor, made a corking good speech. He tore right into the Mellon-Grundy crowd, pictured his opponent and neighbor, Col. Ernest G. Smith, as the part owner and editor of a Democratic daily, the Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader, that found delight in abusing Calvin Coolidge in 1924, and in pounding away at Joe Grundy, inveterate foe of the laboring class, until Grundy made a hurried trip from Scranton to the Westmoreland Club in Wilkes-Barre and tendered second place on the Mellon-Grundy slate to the colonel and wound up with his own way of looking at Senator Patrick F. Joyce's desertion of those who put him in the political saddle in Luzerne. Jones, as shown in another column, charged that from behind the scenes some one got the tip that it would be well for Joyce to jump aboard the Pepper-Fisher-Smith band wagon and that Joyce did a self-preservation act.

"Pennsylvania is not going to be governed by an aristocracy of wealth as represented by Mellon. Men shall continue to run for office in this State on their personal records. The Republican voters will repudiate the Mellon system of selecting State officers," Mr. James said. Pennsylvania will continue to be known as the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and not the commonwealth of Mellon, the fighting district attorney from Luzerne told the audience amidst the wildest kind of applause.

Congressman VARE was given a rousing cheer when introdueed by the toastmaster, the Rev. Dr. D. Pugh Griffith, Episcopal minister, of Jermyn. The Congressman, for the first time since the campaign started, took to task his two talkative opponents. He pictured Governor Pinchot as a politician of many spots, for the reason that when the governor ran for the office he now holds he sought for and received the support of the great political machine controlled by VARE and which he now terms "the gang."

"The distinguished Senator Pepper," the Congressman said, "who for some reason has seen fit to term me as a 'Jonah,' didn't look upon me as such when the Republican organization of Philadelphia put him in office four years ago.

"Every thoroughbred Republican who knows just what the VARE organization means to the party in the State of Pennsylvania will resent the allusion of Governor Pinchot to Philadelphia Republicans as gangsters," he said.

VARE'S SPEECH

The text of the Congressman's speech follows:

"When I submitted my candidacy for the United States Senate to the voters of Pennsylvania, I suggested a great and vital issue for the decision of the voters. Its importance no one will gainsay. The Congress of the United States so fully recognizes this that it is now, through an appropriate committee, giving hearings upon the great question whether the Volstead Act makes for temperance or intemperance. Lincoln once said that this Nation could not endure 'half slave and half free.' Similarly, it can not endure with one half of the people obeying a law and the other half openly violating it. The American people is not in spirit a lawless people. A law, which is so openly violated as the Volstead law, must have features of oppression which a free people can not accept.

"The character of the campaign presented by my two opponents for the nomination presents a curious phenomenon. Although I have consistently refrained from following their policy of personal abuse and shall continue to do so, nevertheless I think I have the right to call attention to just what they mean from the standpoint of sincerity when they say they are 'against the machine.'

PEPPER PLEASED WITH "GANG'S" HELP

"Senator Pepper was elected to his present office four years ago with the full support of the Republican organization. He was extremely grateful for that support, apparently, and quite fond of the Vares whom he now denounces. In fact, he gave a demonstration of this affection by visiting the Republican city committee and offering to 'spit' in the face of any handy bulldog to prove his devotion to the regular organization.

"His violent opposition to the Philadelphia organization did not develop until he became convinced that I intended to contest for the nomination. He has now transferred his enthusiasm for attacking the mythical bulldogs to Pittsburgh where Senator Leslie has just given perfunctory adherence to the Pepper cause.

"And so with Governor Pinchot. Four years ago, the governor was, too, quite fond of the Philadelphia organization. His friendship developed after his nomination for governor and continued right on through the general election when the Republican organization gave him a rousing majority. It continued, in fact, through the session of the legislature when he was given support on many measures, and did not cease until the Republican organization defeated him for delegate to the Republican National Convention because of his opposition to the Coolidge administration. Now Pepper wants to throw me in the river and Pinchot is broadcasting his virtuous opposition to 'the gang' all over the landscape.

"Neither of my opponents has made any attempt to meet the issue which I have raised and which concerns the welfare of the State and the supremacy of its laws. I, naturally, do not complain of their personal attacks upon each other. Governor Pinchot's one argument is to make vague and abusive charges against what he calls 'the gang.' He thus insultingly characterizes the faithful body of Republican workers, who, in season and out of season, have defended the principles of the Republican Party, which he has, throughout his political career, attempted to undermine and destroy.

WORKERS WILL RESENT CHARGE

"The faithful workers of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania will resent the oft-repeated and contemptuous allusion to them as 'the gang.' However much I may disagree with those who support Pinchot, I give them credit for the same sincerity and patriotism as I claim for those Republicans who differ with them. Certainly, I would never allude to this earnest body of men and women who, despite the patent facts, still believe that true temperance can be secured by extreme Volsteadism, as the 'lunatic fringe.' I leave the use of such choice epithets to the scholarly and distinguished senior Senator of Pennsylvania. This contemptuous reference to thousands of good men and women is not calculated to promote his candidacy.

"I have noticed with amusement that the Senator has referred to me as a 'Jonah.' As I recall the increasing majorities in Philadelphia for the principles of the Republican Party, to which I may fairly claim I have contributed by active and lifelong party service, I can not see the propriety of the scriptural analogy. Certainly, the distinguished Senator did not discover that I was a 'Jonah' as long as he had any hope for my support, and nothing was left undone by his friends to force me into the support of his candidacy.

"My only excuse for referring to these personal considerations is the fact that both my opponents seemed disposed to conduct a campaign of abuse, rather than of argument. I prefer to draw the attention of the voters of Pennsylvania to the issue which I have raised and which seems to me vital, not only to the well-being of the American people but to the continued success of the Republican Party. The Democratic Party, reasonably assured of the electoral votes of the almost solid South on the race issue, need only capture the electoral votes of sufficient Northern States to secure power. Can anyone question that, if the Republican Party is forced in these States into the position of defending the excesses of Volsteadism, the Democratic Party will carry those States? The signs are multiplying that such is their program. Both New York and New Jersey have already elected Democratic governors and Senators upon this issue. It is to be feared that if the Republican Party is maneuvered into a false position, it may lose Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Illinois, and other States.

"Thoughtful Republicans everywhere are now perceiving this grave danger. Neither they nor I have any desire to make the question of Volsteadism a party issue, but events are rapidly bringing this about. In New York the Republicans, under the wise leadership of Elihu Root, are proposing a referendum to take the issue of Volsteadism out of party politics. In New Jersey, Senator EDGE is actively working to the same end. My candidacy is intended to do the same for Pennsylvania, for if either Mr. Pinchot or Senator Pepper, each of them an avowed 'dry,' carries this primary election, it is possible that even Pennsylvania might become, with the growing revolt against Volsteadism, a grave peril. I am trying to save the Republican Party of Pennsylvania from this danger.

"Apart from the effect upon party success, my advocacy of a reasonable modification of the Volstead law in the direction of true temperance is based upon the sincere conviction that it is for the welfare of the people. I only ask the voters of Pennsylvania to face the facts. I only ask them to compare the results of the present experiment of Volsteadism with the better methods of other countries. Take, for example, the Province of Quebec, where, under an admirable law, the use of beverages of high alcoholic content is discouraged and the use of light wines and beers is encouraged, but without in any manner restoring the saloon. I invite the voters of Pennsylvania to contrast the results of a sane policy of temperance reform, as shown in Montreal, with the results of Volsteadism in Boston. The two cities are of almost equal size. Mark the results as shown in the police statistics in the matter of drunkenness:

Boston:
1921	30,987
1922	67,643
1923	38,988
Montreal:
1921	5,663
1922	4,356
1923	3,761

"These startling figures disclosed not only that Boston, under Volsteadism, had eight times the drunkenness of Montreal, under a sane law, but that in Boston, notwithstanding the expenditures of millions of dollars for enforcement and the most drastic execution of extreme laws, the amount of drunkenness has increased each year from 1921 to 1923, while in Montreal, under a sane law, which permitted light wines and beers to be served with meals, the amount of drunkenness had each year steadily diminished.

"In the matter of crime the result is not less startling. In 1923 there were 4,833 arrests in Boston to each 100,000 inhabitants, and in Montreal only 627.

"A still more startling revelation of the effects of fanatical Volsteadism is a comparison of the cities of London, Paris, and Washington. London has a population of nearly 8,000,000; Paris, 3,000,000; and Washington, 450,000. It appears that the arrests for drunkenness per hundred thousand of population in these cities are as follows: London, 380; Paris, 500; Washington, 2,000. In other words, Washington, which has only a sixteenth of the population of London and about a sixth of the population of Paris, has eight times as many arrests as London and five times as many as Paris.

"These are startling figures, and it is difficult to understand how any right-minded man or woman would willingly ignore them. Yet the partisans of Volsteadism are not content with the most ruthless law that was ever put upon the statute books of America, but are now trying to get additional legislation which would destroy even the immunity of a man's dwelling house from unreasonable search and seizure. If there be one principle of liberty which is sacred to the English-speaking race, it is the immunity of the home. Even in the darkest days of absolutism in England a man's home was regarded as his "castle of asylum and defense," and even a king could not cross its threshold without the owner's permission. The founders of the Republic wrote this great principle of liberty into our Bill of Rights, but the attempt is now being made in Congress by the Volstead fanatics to break down, if such a thing were possible under our form of government, even the immunity of the home.

"These growing excesses of governmental power have only been possible by the apathy of the people. It is time that thoughtful and patriotic Americans should arise in protest, and this impelled me to announce my candidacy, so that the voters of Pennsylvania could have one candidate who would represent the growing sentiment of the best people of Pennsylvania; that the time has come to take out of our prohibition statutes the insanity of Volstead fanaticism and put a little sanity in its place. Neither I nor anyone wishes the return of the saloon. Neither I nor anyone could wish for the unregulated traffic in intoxicating liquors, but I am only one of many thousands who believe that if the cause of true temperance is to triumph it must be through laws which are reasonable in spirit and have some fair regard for that innate love of liberty which characterizes the American people."

"DAD'S" DAUGHTER'S SPEECH OVER RADIO EXERTED TREMENDOUS INFLUENCE TOWARD AIDING "DAD" WIN SENATORIAL NOMINATION—MISS BEATRICE VARE DID A REMARKABLE BIT OF POLITICAL SPELLBINDING O'ER WCAU; LISTENERS-IN WERE DELIGHTED WITH THE CHARMING GIRL'S SPEECH—"THE BEST 'DADDY' IN ALL THE WORLD"—THE HOUSE OF VARE IS HAPPY AND GRATIFIED AT THE OUTCOME OF THE CLASSIC BATTLE IN WHICH "DADDY" EMERGED WITH GREAT GLORY

One part of the senatorial campaign just finished with tremendous gratification to the house of Vare was the part Miss Beatrice Vare, daughter of the primary senatorial nominee, played in the great political battle.

Miss Vare was an oasis in the desert of political vituperation and calumny. Her "speech," prior to the close of the campaign, from station WCAU, was a message of filial love, sweetness, charm, and common sense. It electrified her vast air audience. It made Miss Vare a conspicious figure in the hearts of our citizenship. It was a speech which was a sweet, gentle summer wind—fresh and fragrant—in contrast with the bitter and brutal windiness emanating from the publicity departments of the anti-Vare political camps.

The campaign was full of charge and countercharge. It developed many brazen voices. It manufactured vicious oratory. It was full of vague statements relative to Congressman VARE—all unjust and far away from the truth concerning Congressman VARE'S splendidly constructive character.

Miss Vare's "speech" therefore was a treat. It was one of the most effective touches in the great campaign. It gave a personal "close-up" of the Congressman which gave thousands a chance to get the proper perspective of the successful senatorial nominee.

It was heart message. It turned many votes in her father's direction. It was a plain tale told with magnificent courage and daughterly loyalty. It went straight to the hearts of her audience.

To-day Miss Beatrice Vare stands out beloved and respected in the community for which her father has striven so hard and for which he has been the recipient of so many unkind "knocks" and villifying charges.

Because it was a classic speech and a most timely talk we are glad to herewith reproduce the speech in full.

THE WCAU RADIO SPEECH OF MISS VARE

"Ladies and gentlemen, for several weeks, both in the newspapers and in pamphlets have been printed the most horrible and malicious falsehoods about my dear father, and I have begged of Mr. Levy, for the use of this radio station for a few moments so that I might tell you a little of the really wonderful man my father is and just why we love him so very, very dearly.

"It is a well-known fact that a man's family is his severest critic, for it is at home that he is best known.

"When a man is agreeable in the morning, when he starts his day's work, he may have a good reason for being so. It may be a customer or a client. It is his business to be pleasant.

"But when a man returns home in the evening, tired and weary from a long day of physical and mental strain, and then is pleasant and thoughtful and kind—then it is because it's the sort of stuff he is made of. And that is just the sort of man my father is, not just once in a while but every day in the year.

"Let me tell you a little incident which happened just the other morning. Our cook was away ill, in fact, at the time we were entirely without help. At 7 o'clock I went downstairs to cook father's breakfast. To my surprise, when I entered the dining room I found that he himself had prepared his own breakfast. I said, 'Why, Daddy, I had no idea you were leaving so early. Why didn't you call me?' And he just put his arm around me and kissed me and said, 'Why, that's all right, honey. You see, I am going up the State campaigning early this morning. I got along just fine for breakfast, and I wouldn't have disturbed you or mother for the world.'

"That same kindness and consideration looms forth in everything daddy ever does or says—a man with such a busy life himself—yet ever mindful of others—a big man doing big things, and remembering all the while that, although the big things make life much greater, it is the little things that often make life much sweeter.

"Last week a man stopped father on the street. He is a reporter on one of the Philadelphia newspapers that head this horrible campaign of slander. He said, 'Mr. VARE, I want you to know that I don't mean any hard feelings by the articles I've been writing. That's the sort of stuff they want at the office, so it's our job to please them. I just want you to know, Congressman, that we boys all know you're the right sort, and we'll all be right there with our votes on the 18th.' That is the way the men who compose the obnoxious stories feel toward my father.

"Although I have always felt that my father was the dearest daddy in the world, it was six years ago, when I was 16, during a very sad summer in the Orient, that I learned to know him best. I was lying very seriously ill. In the next bed had been my dear sister, Ida May, but the fever had been too great for her and God had stepped in and called her on. Mother and Mildred were back in Honolulu and daddy and I were alone.

"Night and day he sat by my bed and wept and watched and prayed. No mother's love could have been more tender during the long period in which I was convalescing. Oh! is it any wonder I love him? And not only I. There are thousands and thousands of Philadelphians and Pennsylvanians who love him, too—for the good man that he is, for his untiring efforts in behalf of humanity, for his willingness to extend a helping hand to all who are in need, regardless of race, creed, or color.

"When my uncle, the late Edwin H. Vare, passed on to his reward these thousands of ardent supporters were a living tribute. The wealthy were there, to be sure, but in that same endless line that filed slowly by the bier for hours and hours were the poor. It required the sacrifice of their wages for the day and yet they made that journey 20 miles out into the country.

"Was it a lash that drove them into that line as the 'Philadelphia Inquirer' and other wicked papers dared to say? No, no. They went way out there into the country in order that they might pay tribute and respect to their friend; to their brother. I stood by and watched the procession. There were old ladies, cripples, and even little children in the throng, and each one paused with tear-stained eyes to bend over and kiss the hand that was cold in death; the hand that had been lifted so often to defend them in trouble; the hand that was kind and generous when they were in need.

"And these good people hold the same love for my father to-day. There is that same great army of thousands; yes, hundreds of thousands, that are rallying to his banner now, eager to show their appreciation of his services in the past and their trust in him in the future. They know that his very life is honesty itself; that his word is his bond. He has never been known to break a promise. And yet he is called a thief and a robber.

"Because prohibition has proved disastrous and my father has the courage to fight against hypocrisy he is called a tool of the liquor interests, a vicious gangster, and even a drunkard. And yet my father is a man who doesn't drink, who doesn't even smoke.

"My father does not, like another candidate I know, advertise himself as a church man. We prefer to class the fact that we attend our church and hear the word of God and receive His blessings as a privilege rather than an achievement.

"Let me ask some of you good people just who have been doing the ungodly, unrighteous slandering in this campaign? Who have been doing the mud slinging?

"The answer is very evident. And I wonder what God thinks to-night when He looks down and sees how some of His people who profess to be Christians have taken His great commandment and broken, yes, splintered it; that great commandment, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness.'"

UNITED STATES SENATE.

AN ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF HON. WILLIAM S. VARE, SENATOR ELECT FROM THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

To the honorable chairman and members of the committee:

The right of WILLIAM S. VARE to the seat in the United States Senate, to which he was elected at the general election in 1926, having been the subject of a very thorough investigation by this honorable committee, Mr. VARE desires to submit to the committee a written argument, reviewing the facts to some extent, and calling attention to such rules of law as may (it is hoped) be helpful to the committee in formulating its report as the result of its investigation.

THE PENNSYLVANIA PRIMARY

On May 18, 1926, a primary election was held in the State of Pennsylvania. The result of that election was the nomination of candidates by the respective political organizations for the offices of United States Senator, governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of internal affairs, 36 Members of Congress, 25 members of the Pennsylvania State Senate, 208 members of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and a long list of local offices.

In this primary election both the Republican and Democratic Parties took part for the nomination of their respective candidates for the various offices. Because perhaps of the remote chance of the election of its candidates, the primary election so far as conducted by the Democratic Party was merely perfunctory and involved the expenditure of little money and the polling of comparatively few votes.

The Republican Party contest was perhaps the most fiercely contested in the history of that State. Three candidates, each supported by powerful and numerous adherents, and each commanding enormous financial resources, waged a contest in which over 1,600,000 votes were cast, and in which each of the candidates apparently had at least a fighting chance of securing the nomination.

Senator George Wharton Pepper, then representing the State in the United States Senate, was a candidate for reelection, and had not only the prestige of office, but the support of numerous business organizations of the State, the help of perhaps a majority of the Republican political organization, and the usual number of personal adherents. His candidacy was coupled up with that of John S. Fisher, who sought the nomination for governor of the State, Ernest G. Smith for lieutenant governor, and James F. Woodward, secretary of internal affairs, and the efforts and expenditures were directed to the nomination of this coalition ticket. The amount so expended or incurred, omitting expenditures exclusively for Governor Fisher's candidacy, amounted to $1,804,979 (Report, p. 6). Senator Pepper received 515,502 votes in the primary mentioned.

Hon. Gifford Pinchot was the governor of Pennsylvania during this campaign, possessed a large patronage by reason of his office, and was financially able to contribute liberally to his own campaign fund. He was known to be opposed to any change in the national prohibition amendment to the Constitution and to the Volstead and other acts passed in pursuance thereto, and consequently had the support of church and temperance organizations in preference to Pepper, who was more or less noncommittal on that issue, and also in preference to VARE, who had proclaimed himself as opposed to national prohibition and particularly opposed to the Volstead and other similar acts. Governor Pinchot's total expenditures amounted to $187,029, of which more than 70 per cent was contributed by himself and members of his family, and he received 339,127 votes at the primary election.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, the remaining Republican candidate, was a Member of Congress from the first Pennsylvania district. He was supported by a small portion of the State Republican organization and apparently very strongly supported by the local Republican organization of the city of Philadelphia. He had the support of those opposed to national prohibition, and his campaign was based largely on opposition to that policy. He received 596,928 votes, and was accordingly nominated. At the election following he was elected over his rival on the Democratic ticket by a plurality of 180,000 votes.

Being successful in the primary election, VARE'S expenditures and conduct during the course of the primary election had received the consideration of the special committee investigating expenditures in senatorial primaries and general elections appointed by the Senate. This makes necessary, or at least appropriate, a more extended investigation into the nature of his campaign fund, its collection and disbursement, than is required in the case of the defeated candidates. Lacking the organization which Governor Pinchot possessed by reason of his governorship, and the organization controlled largely by Senator Pepper, and the influence and patronage of the latter by reason of his senatorial position, VARE was more or less of a free-lance in the campaign. He had conceived the idea that public sentiment in the State of Pennsylvania was opposed to the continuance of the policy of the Government in regard to the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as set forth in the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and as exemplified by the acts of Congress pursuant thereto, and believed, as he had a right to believe, that the people of that State should have an opportunity to express their feelings on this subject by the election to the United States Senate of a candidate who would make this matter a clearly defined and unmistakable issue in the campaign. In announcing his candidacy on March 15, 1926, two months before the primary election, he expressed his views in the following language:

"There is, in addition, another issue of great importance upon which I submit my candidacy to the voters of the Republican Party.

"An effort is being made to force the Republican Party into an extreme position on the great question of prohibition. If successful, it would sooner or later create a fatal breach in the party. Our party has always been in the truest sense a liberal party. It believes in temperance and moderation and in law and order, but it would be false to the great liberal principles upon which it was founded if it could be maneuvered into supporting the tyranny of many features of the Volstead law.

"I shall be opposed in the primaries by two candidates who believe in and would maintain the extreme rigor of the Volstead law. I do not believe that this represents the feeling of the majority of Pennsylvania Republicans of all classes, and it is fitting that this majority should be represented in the coming primaries by a candidate who believes the time has come to modify the excesses of a law which is eating like a cancer into the physical and moral life of the American people.

"Enforcement of the Volstead Act has failed. This fact is obvious to all and needs no argument. It has failed, in my opinion, because the law is not enforceable in its present form.

"In Pennsylvania our citizens have watched its operation backed by the full authority of the State. They have seen money poured out by millions in the Nation. They have seen espionage of the most offensive character brought into practice, and all to what avail?

"Law enforcement is breaking down everywhere. The younger generation is subjected to moral dangers which are the direct outgrowth of this condition. These are not fancied evils. They are real and everyone knows it.

"If I am not greatly mistaken, the American people are tired of this condition and of the indefensible invasion of their just rights. The laborer, at the end of a weary day in the mines or factory, finds himself a criminal if he takes a glass of beer or light wine, and yet he knows that the more favored classes find little difficulty in having well-stocked wine cellars. Against this hypocrisy and inequality I protest. My candidacy will give an opportunity to the voters of Pennsylvania to express their views on this question.

"The people of this State have had full opportunity to test the value of extreme prohibition and they know the result. They were promised a reign of law and they find widespread lawlessness; they were promised a contented and happy people, and they find a people profoundly discontented and justly irritated; they were promised the improvement of public morals and instead they find the moral restraints of life broken down. Against this destruction of law and order and true temperance my candidacy will be a protest.

"The proponents of Volsteadism everywhere throughout the country present a unanimity of attitude which is enlightening. They admit, because they must, the failure of enforcement. Their remedy is more and greater appropriations and more and more laws. I believe the time has come to admit that the present law is not enforceable and to change it so that it can be enforced.

"I stand for the greatest amount of liberty for the people that is consistent with good government, and I am opposed to the enactment of laws which unnecessarily curtail and reduce that liberty. As a matter of helpful enforcement of the real principles of the constitutional amendment, I would advocate a law permitting the sale of light wines and beer.

"I am convinced that such a liberalization of the Volstead Act will not only remedy the conditions I have described, but will, in fact, promote true temperance.

"In this statement I am confident I express the honest sentiment of all well-informed, unbiased men and women who consider this subject with an eye single to the greatest good to the greatest number."

Having no state-wide organization to support him, it became necessary for him to find some means of placing this issue before the public if he expected any result. The press was more or less hostile to him and his platform, and the purchase of adequate space in the newspapers to present his views and claims would have exceeded any possible resources he had at his command. There is one means of disseminating information which he did not resort to. As a Member of Congress he had the undoubted right to give utterance as a Representative to whatever views he saw fit, and he had the franking privileges which would have enabled him to flood the State of Pennsylvania with personal propaganda at the expense of the Government Printing Office and the United States mails, and had he done so perhaps no question would have been raised as to the propriety of his action, for it would not have been the first time that such methods had been employed; nor is the dissemination of knowledge to the public such a serious crime as to call down criticism when the mails are used for that purpose without the paying of postage.

However, Mr. VARE believed that he should not resort to such method for his personal ends and he prepared and sent through the mails at his own expense letters and circulars direct to the people and carrying full postage at a total cost of $71,435.80. This was a very considerable amount of money in one sense of the word, yet when viewed in connection with the result sought to be obtained, it may be said to be almost insignificant in view of the fact that there are in the State of Pennsylvania approximately 3,500,000 voters. This was the only amount he actually expended and these were the only purposes for which such expenditure was made. No law of either State or Nation was violated in this attempt to place before the people the merits of his candidacy or the statement of his political views and beliefs.

The response to this initial expenditure indicated a favorable impression on behalf of the voters of the State of Pennsylvania and a possibility of his nomination. Handicapped as he was in comparison with his opponents, the natural result of organization in increased expenditures followed. A state-wide organization was attempted and partially completed, meetings were held, speakers were sent to different parts of the State, advertising space was bought, circulars were distributed, all of which increased the demands made upon the treasury of his organization.

Funds could not be spent unless they were first collected, and contributions were gratefully accepted and we may suppose eagerly solicited.

The amount of money paid out as expenses of the Vare campaign amounted to approximately $649,800, of which $71,435.80 was expended by the candidate out of his own funds for the payment of the expense of writing and mailing letters to the voters, and the remainder was money collected on his behalf and used for his benefit by the committee having the campaign in hand.

It is far from accurate, however, to say that these amounts were expended to procure the nomination of Mr. VARE, for the campaign waged in his behalf comprehended the nominations for a great number of other officers, both State and national. His principal rival, Senator Pepper, had made a combination which included the candidacy of John S. Fisher for governor, Ernest G. Smith for lieutenant governor, and James F. Woodward for secretary of internal affairs, and also including selected candidates for Congress, for the local legislature, and for the State and local party committees.

The special committee (partial report, p. 3) is well within the facts when it states that the Pepper-Fisher combination was made before any similar coalition was attempted in behalf of Mr. VARE, and it is eminently correct when it states that the relation which existed between the gubernatorial and senatorial candidates is necessary for an understanding of the campaign contributions and expenditures considered by that committee.

Mr. VARE was practically compelled to make "an offensive and defensive alliance against and after the Pepper-Fisher coalition." (Report, supra.) It included the candidacy of Ernest E. Beidleman for governor, Arthur H. James for lieutenant governor, and James Fleming Woodward for secretary of internal affairs. It went much farther than that and comprehended the candidacy of 36 Members of Congress, 25 members of the State senate, 208 members of the State house of representatives, 113 members of the State Republican committee, and a great number of candidates for membership in the county committees.

Outside of the money personally expended by Mr. VARE, every cent collected and disbursed was spent in the election of the entire ticket. Not a dollar was spent by the committee for the exclusive benefit of Mr. VARE or any other candidate, and the charge made that $700,000 was expended to procure the nomination of Mr. VARE is just as unfounded as would be a like charge that the same amount was expended to procure the nomination of Mr. Beidleman for governor or Mr. James for lieutenant governor, or that a like amount was spent to procure the nomination of each of the 36 Members of the National House of Representatives.

One of the expenses of the campaign was the printing and circulation of sample ballots, and to show the extent and impartial operation of this campaign in favor of all the candidates, and to disprove the assertion that this money was spent on behalf of Mr. VARE, we present herewith four sample ballots, selected at random:

On these ballots appear the names of James M. Hazlett, George S. Graham, George P. Darrow, and Harry C. Ransley, all recommended for nomination as Representatives in Congress. If any of these persons were nominated and elected, would anything be more unfair than to charge that he had bought his nomination by the expenditure of more than $700,000, and therefore was unfit to represent his district in Congress? Yet, barring the greater prominence of the office and the greater extent of territory embraced, such charge would not be more unjust than when applied to Mr. VARE.

The entire amount being spent for the joint interest and benefit of an almost innumerable list of candidates, it is impossible to allot any amount to each or to measure the individual benefit each derived from it. But it is undoubtedly true that the contest for the nomination for the governorship was at least as fierce as that for the senatorship, resulting in the defeat of Mr. VARE's running mate by a small plurality. We think it clearly appears from the testimony given before the special investigating committee that the contest between Fisher and Beidleman, so far as concerned an appeal to special interests, especially these represented by the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, and the consequent production of contributions and expenditures of money, greatly overshadowed the contest between the candidates for United States Senator (committee's report, p. 2).

It is therefore wholly at variance with the facts to assume that the large sums of money disbursed by the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee was expended wholly in behalf of Mr. VARE.

One of the largest items was for paid advertising in more than 250 Pennsylvania newspapers, and amounted to over $163,000. There was a printing bill of approximately $82,000, while nearly $18,000 was spent for postage alone; $15,000 was paid out to office help and nearly $14,000 for rent, supplies, and operating expenses of the office maintained as headquarters.

The largest expenditure consisted of contributions to the various local or county committees and amounted to approximately $230,000. It appears that the county committees in turn expended a greater or less amount of these contributions in the employment and payment of watchers at the election. As this item appears to be the only one to which any criticism has been leveled it will receive fuller consideration hereafter.

It is sufficient at this time to say that presumably neither Mr. VARE, nor any of his rivals, desired to expend any such sums as were actually spent. These expenditures became necessary from the very nature of the situation and the only alternative was the abandonment of the contest. If Mr. VARE had rested content with the expenditure of $71,000 of his own money in his initial effort, he might have evoked temporary enthusiasm and attracted potential support, but in the absence of a consolidation and realization of this unorganized favorable sentiment he would have run at the foot of the list instead of the head.

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of our system of primary elections, it can not be doubted or denied that it is the most expensive form of selection of candidates in existence. The people are supposed to make a choice between the conflicting claims of a long list of candidates for each of the several offices for which a nomination is to be made. Naturally the voters are uniformed as to every thing pertaining to the respective candidates—who they are, what they have done in the past, and what they promise to do in the future—and yet the most uninformed exercises an equal influence in the result as does the most enlightened. In addition to being uninformed, or as a result of their lack of information many of the voters are indifferent and this indifference has been increasing until elections now, and primary elections in particular, are ordinarily decided by a mere minority of the persons entitled to vote.

In a general election the average voter votes the ticket of his party from habit and without any great inquiry into the merits of the candidates on it. It is enough for him to know that it is his party's ticket, and he is usually willing to accept the nominees chosen by, or for, him, without question. But in a primary election the voter is required to select out of a number of candidates, all belonging to his party, the one whom he believes best fitted for the particular office or to frame or carry out the party policy. To act intelligently he must inform himself as to the merits, ability, fitness, and availability of each candidate, as well as to the views and beliefs of each.

To inform the electorate of the personality, qualifications, and sentiments of the candidate and to arouse or prod them into action utilizing such information is a thing which can not be done without the prodigal use of money. Under the primary system the candidate may be possessed of every necessary qualification, he may measure up to the intellectual capacity of Webster or Calhoun, and yet suffer defeat at the hands of a third-rate politician possessing none of his qualities, but having a firm grip on the party organization or enjoying the favor of those who control it.

In obedience to this natural and necessary tendency in primary elections the candidates are tempted by competition to bid for public favor by the expenditure of money regardless of whether such expenditure be legitimate or corrupt, and amounts undreamed of in former years may be properly and legally expended.

So far from there being anything unusual in large expenditures in the Pennsylvania primary of May 18, 1926, it would have been an incomprehensible miracle had that primary passed off without enormous expenditures. There were three candidates, each having a large actual, and a much larger potential, personal following. For example, Governor Pinchot was in favor of national prohibition, yet that mere fact would not have brought him a single vote unless information thereof was carried to the people. Mr. VARE was opposed to prohibition as a national policy, yet that fact would not have aided him in the slightest degree in the campaign unless it was forced upon the attention of the voters, and the voters could not know of the sentiments of either Mr. VARE or Governor Pinchot unless money was expended for their information.

And when to this is added the fact that combinations were made both by Senator Pepper and Mr. VARE, each combination presenting a practically complete ticket for every office in the State, the enormous total expended in that hotly contested primary may be a matter of regret or censure, but it should not be one of wonder.

Incidentally, the expenditures for paid watchmen at the polls was a natural result, or rather a part, of the competitive activities of the respective candidates. The primary law of Pennsylvania recognizes the possibility of fraudulent voting and fraudulent returns in a primary contest and permits the employment of watchers by each candidate at such election. In larger cities particularly there are election officials not as much above suspicion as Cæsar's wife was required to be. Without charging that fraud in primary or general elections is common or the general rule, there is a general belief that in certain localities the end is supposed to justify the means to such an extent that no surprise is occasioned when charges of fraud are made and evidence is brought forward to prove them.

There is always the temptation for one side or the other to claim "a fair advantage" in the conduct of the election when it can be done without fear of successful prosecution or merited punishment.

Governor Pinchot appears to have refused to employ watchers, although they were recognized and sanctioned by the primary law of Pennsylvania, and he then makes the complaint that he was defrauded in the primary. Senator Pepper's organization employed a great many watchers, and the county committees supporting Mr. VARE likewise employed a very considerable number.

While it is a reflection upon the integrity of our elections and the honesty of our citizenry that watchers should ever be necessary, the fact remains that in many localities no honest election could be held without some right in the candidates or the party organizations to watch the voting and the returns.

Money was expended for watchers to protect the interests of not only Mr. VARE but of all the hundreds of candidates with whom in common he made the race. When Pennsylvania decided upon a primary law, it considered it necessary, or at least proper, to embody therein certain provisions for the employment by the different candidates of persons who occupied quasi official positions and were called watchers. Section 21 of the act of 1906 provides:

"Each candidate shall be entitled to appoint two watchers at the primary in each election district, division, or precinct in which such candidate is to be voted for, who shall be qualified electors of the district, division, or precinct. Each watcher shall be provided with a certificate from the county commissioners, stating his name, the district in which he is authorized to act, and the name of the candidate appointing him, and shall have the right to remain in the room outside of the inclosed space. Watchers shall be required to show their certificates when requested to do so."

The right to employ watchers is thus expressly given by the statutes of that State, and the right to pay them follows by necessary implication. The inference that the employment of watchers is simply a covert method of buying their votes has no foundation other than the possibility that every honest method for securing a result may be converted into a means of dishonesty or fraud. It is possible that the corrupt purchase of advertising space in a newspaper might carry with it the sale of its influence and support to the candidate inserting the advertisement. But the mere possibility of such a result is not sufficient to prove that the press generally sells its convictions in the same way it sells its advertising space, or that any newspaper which carries political advertisements has prostituted its profession for the benefit of its business office.

If men can be induced to sell their votes for indirect benefit, they could be bought without being employed as watchers; they could be employed in other capacities upon the understanding that their services included their votes. And when the legitimacy of employing watchers is established by the State statute, and no proof is made that they were employed or paid for any purpose except for the discharge of the duties of that employment, an inference that this was merely an indirect method of purchasing votes rests solely upon a vague suspicion or upon an application of the unheard-of presumption that all men are rogues and dishonest until the contrary appears.

It clearly appears from the voluminous testimony taken before the special investigating committee that large sums of money were spent by the various candidates and combinations of candidates, but it does not appear even as a fair inference that Mr. VARE, or the Vare-Beidleman-James-Woodward committee violated any law of the United States or the State of Pennsylvania, or that WILLIAM S. VARE was not the free choice of a large plurality of the Republican electors of that State. Nor does it appear that he fails in the possession of any of the qualifications which the Constitution requires of a Senator of the United States, nor that he did not fairly receive a majority of the votes cast for Senator at the general election in 1926, or that either before or since his election he has shown any moral or legal defects that would be inconsistent with, or unfit him for, the discharge of the duties of a Senator of the United States.

The question then arises, On what conceivable theory can he be denied the right to occupy the seat to which he has been fairly elected by the people of Pennsylvania, and for which he possesses all of the qualifications required by the Constitution of the United States?

I. THE RIGHTS OF WILLIAM S. VARE

At the time of the holding of the primary election in the State of Pennsylvania, as well as the general election which followed it, WILLIAM S. VARE had attained the age of more than thirty years, had been a citizen of the United States for more than nine years, and when elected was an inhabitant of the State from which he was chosen, and he was not the holder of any office under the United States, nor had he at any time engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof, and above all other qualifications he was elected by the people of that State to the office of United States Senator.

He thus possessed every constitutional qualification for the office of Senator, and by his election he became possessed of a legal right which could not be lawfully destroyed by any person or collection of persons acting in either their individual or official capacities.

It is a striking and noteworthy fact that one of the greatest, if not preeminently the greatest decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, involving a discussion of the powers of government under our Constitution, related to the right of a citizen to hold an office. Whether this right is denominated a vested right or a property right or whether any description or classification be made of it, it is declared to be a right of which the citizen may not be arbitrarily deprived.

In Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 138), decided February, 1803, the facts were that President Adams had signed commissions appointing Marbury and others as justices of the peace of the District of Columbia, the seal of the United States had been affixed to such commissions and attested by the Secretary of State. The appointments were made near the close of President Adams's term of office, and by some oversight were not delivered but came into the possession of James Madison, the newly appointed Secretary of State under Thomas Jefferson.

These offices were purely statutory and resulted from an act of Congress which provided that such number as might be necessary should be appointed as justices of the peace of the District of Columbia for a term of five years. The jurisdiction of such justices was extremely limited, being restricted to personal demands not exceeding the value of $20; their number was unlimited and the emoluments or profits accruing to each justice appointed must necessarily have been insignificant. Such an office was certainly of the lowest grade and least in importance, profit, and honor of all the offices ever created by the Congress of the United States. Yet it was not so insignificant as to be without the protection of the laws, even though it might not be vindicated by mandamus proceedings brought directly in the Supreme Court. In delivering the opinion in that case, Chief Justice Marshall said many things which time at least should not be permitted to wither and are, or ought to be, as just and true to-day as when they were uttered by that preeminent expounder of our Constitution. He said:

"The very essence of civil liberty certainly consists in the right of every individual to claim the protection of the laws, whenever he receives an injury."

After quoting from Blackstone that "It is a settled and invariable principle in the laws of England that every right, when withheld, must have a remedy, and every injury its proper redress," the Chief Justice said:

"The Government of the United States has been emphatically termed a government of laws and not of men. It will certainly cease to deserve this high appellation if the laws furnish no remedy for the violation of a vested legal right.

"If this obloquy is to be cast on the jurisprudence of our country it must arise from the peculiar character of the case.

"It behooves us then to inquire whether there be in its composition any ingredient which shall exempt it from legal investigations, or exclude the injured party from legal redress. In pursuing this inquiry the first question which presents itself is, whether this can be arranged with that class of cases which come under the description of damnum absque injuria, a loss without an injury.

"This description of cases never has been considered and it is believed never can be considered, as comprehending offices of trust, of honor, or of profit. The office of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia is such an office; it is therefore worthy of the attention and guardianship of the laws. It has received that attention and guardianship. It has been created by special act of Congress, and has been secured so far as the laws can give security, to the person appointed to fill it, for five years. It is not, then, on account of the worthlessness of the thing pursued, that the injured party can be alleged to be without a remedy.

"Is it in the nature of the transaction? Is the act of delivering or withholding a commission to be considered as a mere political act, belonging to the executive department alone, for the performance of which entire confidence is placed by our Constitution in the Supreme Executive; and for any misconduct respecting which, the injured individual has no remedy?

"That there may be such cases is not to be questioned; but that every act of duty, to be performed in any of the great departments of government, constitutes such a case, is not to be admitted."

If this language is applicable to one of the most insignificant statutory offices ever created, it is at least equally applicable to the office of Senator of the United States. This latter office does not in any sense depend upon the will of the executive, judicial, or legislative departments of the Government, but constitutes part and parcel of the very framework of our national political organization and owes its existence exclusively to the Constitution.

Its term is fixed by that instrument at six years, the qualifications of the persons who may be elected are likewise prescribed by it; and the Senate thus constituted acknowledges no superior in dignity and influence among the legislative councils of the world.

If the mere act of the executive in affixing his name to a parchment commission invests his appointee with a vested right to enjoy the honors, dignities, and profits of the office of a justice of the peace, can it be said that a Senator of the United States, possessing all the qualifications required by the Constitution as well as an election by the people of his State, has no greater right to the dignity, honor, and emoluments of a Senator of the United States than his fellow members may, in their discretion, permit him to have?

It is now proposed to deprive WILLIAM S. VARE of the vested rights he has acquired to hold the office of United States Senator for six years and to strip him of all the honor attached to that office and rob him of the salary annexed to it. It is not to be supposed that the Members of the Senate of the United States are so tyrannical by nature, so arbitrary and conscienceless in the exercise of their senatorial duties that they will lend their aid to such a result merely because they are possessed of the power to do so or because a wrongful exercise of that power might make it doubtful whether the person thus injured could have any adequate remedy or redress from any other body or tribunal. It is to be assumed that every Member of the Senate of the United States recognizes the obligations and duties comprehended in the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and that no Member would give his assent to a proceeding or a judgment of deprivation of any rights of any citizen of the United States unless good, legal, or constitutional reasons could be found for so doing.

If the Senate of the United States has power to overthrow the declared will of the people of Pennsylvania in the choice of the person selected to represent them in that body it must be found in section 5, of Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that:

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," etc.

Unless the provision that each House shall be the judge of the qualifications of its own Members means that the Senate has plenary power and discretion to arbitrarily determine the fitness of an elected Senator, then such section furnishes no authority or legal grounds for the deprivation of the rights, duties, honors, and salary of the person duly and legally elected.

The very language of the section itself forbids any such interpretation or construction of this section. Each House is to be the "judge" of the qualifications of its own Members; in other words, is to determine, ascertain, or decide whether the elected Member possesses the necessary qualifications. The power to determine whether certain qualifications exist are possessed by the Member is judicial in its character and is the direct opposite of the power or jurisdiction to prescribe, define, or impose qualifications under its legislative power.

Chancellor Kent, in Volume I of his Commentaries, at page 235, says:

"Each House is made the sole judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its members. The same power is vested in the British House of Commons and in the legislatures of the several States, and there is no other body known to the Constitution to which such a power might safely be trusted. It is requisite to preserve a pure and genuine representation, and to control the evils of irregular, corrupt, and tumultuous elections; and as each House acts in these cases in a judicial character, its decisions, like the decisions of any other courts of justice, ought to be regulated by known principles of law, and strictly adhered to for the safety of uniformity and certainty."

When the Senate or House of Representatives acts under the provisions of said article of the Constitution, it must necessarily act in a judicial capacity, it must be the judge and act as a judge for the purpose of determining, first, whether the Member presenting a certificate of election has in fact been elected; and incidental to this power it acts judicially in determining whether or not the returns of the election show that the Member has been in fact elected. This proceeding involves the decision of matters both of fact and of law and the result arrived at is a determination of the fact under a proper application of the law relative thereto.

In no other sense does either House act in exercise of its power to be the judge of the qualifications of its own Members. It acts judicially in ascertaining the facts as to such qualifications and applies the facts thus found to the constitutionally prescribed qualifications which the Member must possess, and to say that this provision of the Constitution means that either House may prescribe qualificaions and require conformity thereto by the elected Member is to utterly ignore the plain language and meaning of section 5, of Article I, of the Constitution of the United States.

Judicial action is the very antithesis of legislative power. Before a judge can act there must be some already existing rules, written or unwritten, statutory or constitutional, which shall serve as a rule and guide for the rendition of a proper judgment or decision upon the facts admitted or found to exist. So when the Senate of the United States is constituted a judge of the qualifications of its own Members, this investment of judicial power presupposes the existence of some rule of law in some form, which shall govern the judicial action of the Senate in determining whether the facts found to exist indicate that the elected Member possesses the qualifications of which the Senate is to be the judge.

This logical presumption that qualifications must be prescribed before the Senate or any other body or tribunal can be the judge in respect thereto is fully realized in the various provisions of the Constitution itself. We find upon examination that the Constitution has prescribed in clear and unmistakable language the qualifications not only of Senators of the United States, but also Members of the House of Representatives, the President, and Vice President. The constitutional convention was acting as the supreme legislative body and its work, the Constitution of the United States, and the laws which should be made in pursuance thereof became "the supreme law of the land." In exercising its legitimate legislative functions, the constitutional convention prescribed the qualifications for Senators of the United States by the indirect method of enumerating certain disqualifications which would prevent the citizen possessed of the same from being elected Senator. In framing this Constitution, the people of the United States, through their representatives, were establishing a representative democratic form of government. They prohibited the granting of titles of nobility, guaranteed to every State a republican form of government, and secured to every citizen equal rights to life, liberty, and property, regardless of distinctions or qualifications.

In determining what persons might hold office of trust and profit under the United States they did not select certain classes from which such officers should be elected. They proceeded upon the theory of a presumptive right of every citizen, as a general rule, and subject to very few exceptions, to aspire to any office within the gift of the people. The exceptions by which they departed from the application of this general rule were stated as disqualifications, and in the case of Senators of the United States these disqualifications are found in section 3 of Article I, and were: First, that no person should be a Senator who had not attained the age of 30 years; second, that no person should be a Senator who had not been nine years a citizen of the United States and third, that no person should be a Senator who should not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he should be chosen.

It is perfectly logical, therefore, to say that all citizens of the United States are qualified for election as Members of the Senate unless they are subject to the specific disqualifications of section 3 of Article I, of the Constitution. Another disqualification is found in section 6 of Article I, that "no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office."

The above are all the express and specific disqualifications which could have any pertinence or relevancy to this discussion.

There is one positive qualification absolutely requisite and necessary to the right of a Senator of the United States to hold his office and that is that under the provisions of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution he shall have been "elected by the people" of his State.

All of the constitutional provisions above referred to constitute a complete and harmonious scheme for the representation of the various States by their Senators in Congress, with the right and duty imposed upon the Senate to see that none are admitted to its councils who are disqualified for any reason mentioned in the Constitution.

It is the duty of the Senate to be the judge, and, therefore, to judicially try and determine the qualifications of its own Members, i. e., to determine that each person seeking admission has attained the age of 30 years, has been a citizen of the United States for 9 years, and who was at the time of his election an inhabitant of the State from which he was chosen, and that he was not holding any office under the United States, and it is likewise its right and duty to see that he was elected by the people of his State.

If WILLIAM S. VARE was elected by the people of Pennsylvania to the office of United States Senator, if at the time of his election he had attained the age of 30 years, had been nine years a citizen of the United States, and was an inhabitant of the State of Pennsylvania and was not holding any office under the United States, then he fulfilled every requirement which the people of the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution and its amendments deemed requisite to be possessed by the representative of a State in the National Senate. He thereby became possessed of a vested right entitling him to that office, a denial of which right would be a personal wrong inflicted upon him as well as a manifest infraction of the Constitution unless some other constitutional provision furnishes a ground to legally and constitutionally deprive him of this vested right or prevent him from enjoying the same.

This depends, of course, upon the meaning of the constitutional provisions above set forth. Was it the intention of the framers of the Constitution that its enumeration of disqualifications should be exclusive and that the States, upon ratifying that instrument, should rest in the security of the belief that they might be represented in the Senate by whomsoever they chose, subject only to the disqualifications found in the Constitution itself, or did they mean that the House of Representatives and the Senate should have the right by legislative act to impose other and additional qualifications or that either House should have unlimited and arbitrary discretion to reject an elected Senator who failed to possess certain other qualifications believed by the other Members to be proper and necessary?

A mere statement of this proposition ought to furnish or at least indicate its answer. A universal rule of construction is that a specific enumeration of powers granted or denied, or of qualifications required or disqualifications imposed, necessarily excludes the attaching of additional powers, qualifications, or disqualifications.

Story, in his great work on the Constitution, at section 448, makes the following remarks as to the application of the rule that affirmative or negative provision excludes or implies others in the following language:

"The truth is that in order to ascertain how far an affirmative or negative provision excludes or implies others, we must look to the nature of the provisions, the subject matter, the object and scope of the instrument. These and these alone can properly determine the rule of construction. There can be no doubt that an affirmative grant of power will, in many cases, imply an exclusion of all others. As, for instance, when the Constitution declares that the power of Congress shall extend to certain enumerated cases, this specification of particulars evidently excludes all pretensions to a general legislative authority. Why? Because an affirmative grant of special powers would be absurd as well as useless if a general authority were intended."

When the Constitutional Convention specified four specific facts constituting disqualifications for Senators of the United States it could only have meant that such enumeration of disqualifications should be exclusive.

Could it be imagined that the Constitutional Convention meant that each House should have the right to prescribe additional disqualifications to those specified in the Constitution when it expressly enumerated such disqualifications? Would it not have been absurd had the Constitution provided that no person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 30 years, be 9 years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen, and then added "or subject to any disqualifications which the Members of the respective Houses may agree upon." If it would be nonsensical to expressly numerate certain disqualification and then expressly provide that some other body might add additional disqualifications, the same patent absurdity is manifest when the right to add other disqualifications is sought by implication.

In the celebrated case of Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 138) it was contended that Congress had the right to confer original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court in addition to the matters of original jurisdiction specifically enumerated in the Constitution, or to state the matter more concretely, that Congress had the right to confer upon the Supreme Court original jurisdiction in madamus where the Constitution had said that the Supreme Court should have original jurisdiction in all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and counsel, and those in which a State shall be a party, and that in all other cases it should have appellate jurisdiction with such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make. In disposing of this contention the court said:

"It has been insisted at the bar that as the original grant of jurisdiction to the supreme and inferior courts is general and the clause assigning original jurisdiction to the Supreme Court contains no negative or restrictive words, the power remains in the legislature to assign original jurisdiction to that court in other cases than those specified in the article which has been recited; provided those cases belong to the judicial power of the United States.

"If it had been intended to leave to the discretion of the legislature to apportion the judicial power between the supreme and inferior courts according to the will of that body, it would certainly have been useless to have proceeded further than to have defined the judicial power and the tribunals in which it should be vested. The subsequent part of the section is mere surplusage, is entirely without meaning, if such is to be the construction. If Congress remains at liberty to give to this court appellate jurisdiction where the Constitution has declared their jurisdiction shall be original and original jurisdiction where the Constitution has declared it shall be appellate, the distribution of jurisdiction made in the Constitution is form without substance.

"Affirmative words are often in their operation negative of other objects than those affirmed; and in this case a negative or exclusive sense must be given to them or they have no operation at all."

If the Constitution intended that Congress should have any right to impose disqualifications upon Senators or Representatives it would not have committed the folly of enumerating specific disqualifications itself, and its enumeration of disqualifications, if not meant to be exclusive of all others, is simply meaningless.

And this is particularly so when considered in the light of the object sought to be obtained. The principal bone of contention in the Constitutional Convention was the method by which the States and the people should be represented in the National Congress, the smaller States contending for equal representation and voting power in both the House of Representatives and the Senate and the larger States contending that representation should be influenced by the size, importance, and population of the various States. No controversy aroused such bitter animosities or resulted in so much wrangling or discussion as this question of the manner and method of representation. In order that this controversy should be put finally at rest, the matter was compromised by apportioning the Members of the House of Representatives according to population and providing that each State should have two Senators to be elected by the legislature of each particular State. That this right should not be subject to the will of Congress and should remain a permanent feature of the Government, this compromise was carried into the Constitution and the adoption of that Constitution was brought about by the understanding that, subject only to the restrictions of the Constitution, each State should have the right to choose whomsoever it would to represent it in its sovereign capacity in the Senate of the United States.

If the Senate has the right to change the qualifications of Senators, it has an equal right to disturb the basis of representation. If it can say that any person who spends $71,000 in circularizing his constituents is manifestly unfit to be a Senator of the United States, it has the equal right to say that a State like Nevada or New Mexico should not have the same number of Senators as a State exceeding it one hundredfold in population. If it had been understood that Congress, or either House, could add to or take away from the constitutional right of each State to representation in the Senate, the convention would never have adopted the Constitution, nor would the States ever have ratified it. Imagine Connecticut, Rhode Island, Delaware, or New Jersey voting to ratify a constitution which left to a majority of the Senate a decision as to the basis of representation in that body or the right to prescribe the qualifications of the Senators they were entitled to elect.

It was so understood by the men who framed the Constitution and urged its adoption on the people. Madison, in No. 45 of the Federalist, answered objections of the opponents of the Constitution and allayed the fears of those who believed that the rights of the different States in the choice of their representatives in the Senate would not be sufficiently safeguarded and guaranteed, said:

"The Senate will be elected absolutely and exclusively by the State legislatures."

In none of the discussions or debates of that period is there any intimation that the provisions of section 5 of Article I, making each House the judge of the qualifications of its own Members, would give to either House the right to capriciously or arbitrarily reject a person whom his State had seen fit to honor by his election to the Senate; but fears were expressed that section 4 of Article I, giving Congress power by law to make and alter regulations in the time, manner, and places of holding elections for Senators and Representatives would enable the National Congress to dictate to the States whom they should select as their Senators or Representatives. One of the arguments was that Congress under this power (not at all under the power to judge of the qualifications of its own Members) could pass such laws as would favor the "wealthy and well born" and thus secure their election to Congress. In No. 60 of the Federalist, Hamilton answered this contention, as follows:

"The truth is that there is no method of securing to the rich the preferences apprehended but by prescribing qualifications of property either for those who may elect or be elected. But this forms no part of the power conferred upon the National Government. Its authority would be restricted expressly to the regulations of the times, the places, and the manner of elections. The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked on other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution and are unalterable by the legislature."

Thus as to the persons who may choose it was provided in section 2 of Article I of the Constitution that the Members of the House of Representatives should be chosen by the voters in each State, who should have the qualifications of voters for members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. In other words, each State might prescribe the qualifications of voters for its State house of representatives, might attach any qualifications or disqualifications it might see fit as applied to such voters, and when it had done so the persons entitled to vote for a member of the State legislature became ipso facto entitled to vote for the National Representative in that district.

In like manner, Senators were to be elected by the legislature of each State, and how such legislature should be composed and what qualifications should be required of the members of the State legislature were matters entirely within the power of the people of each State in forming or amending its constitution. It was clearly the understanding of Hamilton that no power resided in Congress to impose additional restrictions or qualifications upon the individuals or bodies having the right to elect Senators or Representatives in Congress.

As to the persons to be chosen, their qualifications were "defined and fixed in the Constitution and unalterable by the legislature" and these qualifications were those found in Article I of the Constitution relative to Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. It is pertinent to inquire at this point whether Congress could legally and constitutionally pass a law which would in terms disqualify a Senator who, for instance, had expended in his campaign for nomination or election more than 10 cents for each voter of the State. We do not think that anyone would contend that Congress has the power by a specific legislative act to constitutionally impose such a disqualification in addition to those enumerated in Article I of the Constitution. If it can not enact such a law, it certainly can not adopt a mere resolution which shall deprive a Senator of his office with all its honors and subject him to disgrace because of disqualifications found in neither law nor Constitution, but existing only in the moral sense of other Members of the United States Senate.

The vast claims made for the powers of the Senate under its right to be the judge of the qualifications of its own Members is assuming an importance never before attributed to it, and never imagined by the framers or expounders of the Federal Constitution. When the labors of the Constitutional Convention had ended, and the question arose as to its ratification by the several States, all kinds of fears, real and imaginary, possessed the people and found utterance in protests and objections made by an army of opponents to its adoption. Objections were made that the powers of the Executive were too extensive, that the Executive and legislative powers were blended in both the President and the Senate by the right of the Executive to veto legislation and the right of the Senate to confirm appointments of the President; objection was made that the rights of the State were not sufficiently guarded in the choice of their Representatives and that Congress might by its supervisory power over elections destroy the integrity and identity of the State governments and that the same result might be feared from the constitutional declaration of its own supremacy.

All reasonable and many unreasonable objections were answered by that great trinity of statesmen—Jay, Hamilton, and Madison—in the Federalist, and it is worthy of note that not a single word can be found anywhere in that famous exposition of the Constitution relating to the provision of the Constitution that each House shall be the judge of the qualifications of its own Members, except the purely perfunctory reference in No. 53, that "Each House is, as it necessarily must be, the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own Members," showing that it was understood to be merely a matter of ordinary parliamentary practice, going no further than to give each House the right to determine whether its Members had been legally elected and whether they possessed the qualifications which had been prescribed in the Constitution itself.

If it had been intimated that the Senate of the United States had the right to create disqualifications and adjudge elected Members incapable of holding the office to which they were elected, except upon the will and at the discretion of their fellow Members, the whole country would have been vocal with protest and none of the great statesmen named would have raised his voice in defense of such a construction of the power granted.

One of the earliest commentators on the Constitution was Rawle, who in his work, published in 1825, merely refers to the fact that each House possessed such power, while Story, writing his great work a few years thereafter, gave his reasons for this provision and his view of its nature, as follows:

"It is obvious that a power must be lodged somewhere to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of the Members of each House of the Legislature; for otherwise there could be no certainty as to who were legitimately chosen Members, and any intruder or usurper might claim a seat and thus trample upon the rights and privileges and liberties of the people. Indeed, elections would become, under such circumstances, a mere mockery and legislation the exercise of sovereignty by a self-constituted body. The obvious question on such a subject is as to the body in which such a power shall be lodged. If lodged in any other than the legislative body itself, its independence, its purity, and even its existence and action may be destroyed or put in imminent danger. No other body but itself can have the same motives to preserve and perpetuate these attributes; no other body can be so perpetually watchful to guard its own rights and privileges from infringement and to purify and vindicate its own character and to preserve the rights and sustain the free choice of its constituents."

But it was not necessary, only convenient, that this power to judge of the qualifications of its Members, as well as of their election, that such power should be lodged in each House; it might have been reposed in the Houses jointly, or it might have been conferred upon the Supreme Court, or a special tribunal might have been created to determine these matters. While a usual parliamentary practice, it was not a right inherent in any deliberative body which was constituted by the will of the people in such form and with such powers as the people might confer. It was conferred upon each House only to the extent and for the purpose it plainly states.

Suppose these questions had been determinable by a special body or tribunal—would anyone contend that such a body would not be bound to apply the constitutional enumeration of disqualifications in its determination as to the right of the Member to his seat?

Would anyone suppose that such a tribunal could temporarily deprive a State of its right of representation in the Senate according to its own sense of fitness and propriety, and wholly regardless of the provisions of the Constitution? When such power is lodged in each House, purely for convenience (but with the utmost propriety), it acquired no greater rights than would a mere court established to determine the same questions under the same circumstances.

It is now claimed that this power may be employed not to ascertain who were legitimately chosen or to prevent intruders or usurpers trampling upon the rights and privileges and liberties of the people, nor to preserve the rights and sustain the free choice of its constituents, but to capriciously and arbitrarily destroy the rights and deny the freedom of choice of the voters of a State and to make the Senate by a process of rejection and elimination a self-constituted body into whose council none should be admitted except in pursuance of the arbitrary selection or approval of the Members of the Senate.

And this, too, not by reason of any legislative enactment which would declare in advance the qualifications to be possessed by him who would obtain the favor of his fellow members, but by an ex post facto prescription of qualifications arising after the election of the Member and to be applied according to the arbitrary will of the Members of the Senate as each particular occasion arose, and as the passions or interest of a majority might prompt it to determine.

Jefferson (Manual, sec. 3), after stating the arguments in favor of the power to imprison for contempt because of the publication of a libel against the Senate in the case of William Duane, expressed his views which would be applicable to the present discussion if it could be conceived that the Senate of the United States claimed the right to deprive of his seat and office a Senator elected by the people not because of the violation of any law but according to the individual sense of each Senator as to the extralegal qualifications a Senator ought to possess:

"That in requiring a previous law the Constitution had regard to the inviolability of the citizen, as well as the Member; as should one House in the regular form of a bill aim at too broad privileges, it may be checked by the other, and both by the President; and also as the law being promulgated the citizen will know how to avoid offense. But if one branch may assume its own privileges without control; if it may do it on the spur of the occasion, conceal the law in its own breast, and after the act is committed make its sentence both the law and the judgment on that fact; if the offense be kept undefined and to be declared only ex re nata, and according to the passions of the moment, and there be no limitations either in the manner or measure of the punishment, the condition of the citizen will be perilous indeed."

The condition of the citizen who aspires to the office of Senator of the United States will be equally perilous if he may be deprived of the office to which he has been fairly elected, and for which he possesses every qualification required by the Constitution, by the assumption on the part of the Senate of a right to require in his particular case such other additional qualifications as a bare majority of the membership may require.

Any action of the Senate in depriving VARE of his seat on such grounds would necessarily be based on that most typical act of despotism, an ex post facto declaration of criminality in the doing of an object innocent or lawful when done, an act abhorrent to our sense of natural justice and expressly condemned by our Constitution.

Following the Civil War the people of Missouri formed a new constitution, certain provisions of which excited attention, one being the exaction of a test oath from all persons holding any office of profit or trust, to the effect that such person had "always been truly and loyally on the side of the United States against all enemies thereof, foreign or domestic," failure to take the oath being punishable by loss of the office. By further provisions those who could not or would not take this oath were deprived of the right to vote, to hold any office, be a candidate for office, serve as a juror, practice as an attorney, be an officer of a corporation, a school-teacher, a priest or minister of the gospel. In other words, these constitutional provisions undertook to declare guilty and punish, by deprivation of civil rights, all persons who could not take the oath that they had never done certain specified things or acts which this constitution then for the first time declared unlawful.

In Cummings v. Missouri (4 Wall. 277, 18 Law Ed. 356) the Supreme Court, in holding such portions of the State constitution invalid, said:

"The oath could not, therefore, have been required as a means of ascertaining whether parties were qualified or not for their respective callings or the trusts with which they were charged. It was required, in order to reach the person, not the calling. It was exacted not from any notion that the several acts designated indicated unfitness for the callings but because it was thought that the several acts deserved punishment, and that for many of them there was no way to inflict punishment except by depriving the parties who had committed them of some of the rights and privileges of the citizen.

"The disabilities created by the constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties—they constitute punishment. We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri that 'to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty, or property, and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all.' The learned counsel does not use these terms—life, liberty, and property—as comprehending every right known to the law. He does not include under liberty freedom from outrage on the feelings as well as restraints on the person. He does not include under property those estates which one may acquire in the professions, though they are often the source of the highest emoluments and honors. The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, previously enjoyed, may be punishment; the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining the fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment. Disqualification from the pursuits of a lawful avocation, or from positions of trust, or from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or acting as executor, administrator, or guardian may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment." * * *

"The theory upon which our political institutions rest is that all men have certain inalienable rights—that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that in this pursuit of happiness all avocations, all honors, all positions are alike open to everyone, and that in the protection of all these rights all are equal before the law. Any deprivation or suspension of any of these rights for past conduct is punishment, and can be in no other wise defined."

The denial of the right of WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the Senate, for which he possesses all the constitutional qualifications and to which he has been fairly elected, is a punishment inflicted personally upon him, and it is inflicted not in pursuance of any lawful authority, or by virtue of any enactment of any legislature, but by a proceeding resulting in a judgment which can not be distinguished from an attainder, which is thus described in the opinion cited:

"A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.

"If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes, in the language of the textbooks, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs adduced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise, and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense.

"'Bills of this sort,' says Mr. Justice Story, 'have been usually passed in England in times of rebellion or gross subserviency to the Crown, or of violent political excitement; periods in which all nations are most liable (as well the free as the enslaved) to forget their duties and trample upon the rights and liberties of others' (Story, Com. sec. 1344)."

In Calder v. Bull (3 Dallas, 386) the term "ex post facto law" was declared to be:

"First. Every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action," etc.

WILLIAM S. VARE spent, in round numbers, $71,000 in preparing, printing, and mailing certain literature circulating through the mails to the voters of Pennsylvania. In doing so he committed no crime against any law of the United States or the State of Pennsylvania, and such conduct on his part did not have the effect of disqualifying him within the meaning of any provision of the Constitution of the United States. Not only so, but the furnishing of information to the voters of the State as to the political principles he entertained and advocated for the purpose of securing their support, if they concurred in the same, so far from being even a moral wrong or delinquency, was highly proper and laudable. To deprive him of his office because he made this expenditure for this purpose could only result from that combination in one body of the legislative powers and judicial functions which have always been held the very essence of tyranny and despotism. The Senate, acting for itself and without the concurrence of the House of Representatives or the approval of the President, would, in effect at least, enact a law in its legislative capacity that anyone who had theretofore spent $71,000 in circularizing his constituents was guilty of an act so criminal and immoral in its nature as to amount to a disqualification for the office of United States Senator; and then, immediately or concurrently, acting in its judicial capacity, it would try the fact, and, finding it to exist, would apply the newly established legislative pronouncement, and, acting both as legislator and judge, would at one and the same time create the crime and condemn the criminal. And this, too, by a law ex post facto in its nature, making that criminal which was innocent at the time it was committed and applying it to the particular case without laying down any general rule by which other aspirants in the future might avoid the commission of a like offense. If the Senate has the right to enact, to all intents and purposes, a law that no aspirant for the Senate shall spend $71,000 in disseminating literature, how could any future candidate be able to even guess the amount that might be legitimately expended without incurring the censure of that body?

If such candidate should expend only one-tenth of that amount, or $7,100, what assurance would he have that such expenditure would not be deemed sufficient in the eyes of a majority of the Members of the Senate to deprive him of the office he had obtained, particularly if such majority was politically or personally unfriendly to him?

If the Senate had the power to exclude an elected Senator because of the expenditure of $71,000, it would have exactly the same power to take the high moral ground that no Senator has the right to spend anything to influence his nomination or election, and thereupon exclude him upon proof that he had spent any amount for that purpose, however insignificant such amount might be.

The candidacy of WILLIAM S. VARE apparently evoked an enthusiastic response from among a great number of persons who evidently concurred in his political views. They organized a campaign committee, solicited contributions, received a large amount as the result of such solicitations, and disbursed it for the usual and ordinary purposes to which campaign funds are usually devoted—expense of newspaper and other forms of advertising, payment of the expenses of speakers, printing, postage, maintenance of headquarters, payment of employees, and contributions to local organizations. The amount so collected and expended in behalf of the ticket on which his name appeared amounted to from $600,000 to $700,000; the exact amount is immaterial, for the question arises whether the Senate, under its bare power to judge of the qualifications of its own Members, can deny admission to one in whose behalf a certain amount of money has been collected and expended for campaign purposes. In determining this question of right, the further question arises whether both Houses of the National Legislature, with the approval of the President, could validly and constitutionally enact a law, prospective in its operation, that thereafter the expenditure of $600,000 on behalf of the candidacy of an elected Senator should be an absolute disqualification justifying his rejection as a Senator. We do not apprehend that anyone would contend that such legislative power existed.

The several States have the undoubted primary right to make whatever regulations are necessary for maintaining the purity of the ballot, for the limiting of campaign expenses, and to prevent corrupt practices of any kind; and they have the undoubted right to punish those who violate any of such provisions which are declared to be criminal.

The Congress of the United States, by virtue of its ultimate right of regulation of elections where Senators and Representatives are chosen, may undoubtedly enact laws with the same purpose in view and declare a violation thereof punishable as a crime. But neither the National Government nor the States can add to or take away from the disqualifications or qualifications of a Senator or Representative of the United States, for these disqualifications or qualifications are fixed by the will of the people as embodied in the Constitution, which is declared to be the supreme law of the land and beyond the power of alteration by any of the departments of either State or National Government, or in any manner except by an amendment or alteration of the Constitution itself.

So clearly was it understood by the framers of the Constitution that Congress had no power to add to or take away from the qualifications of Senators or Representatives that Hamilton, in No. 60 of the Federalist, demonstrated that any attempt on the part of Congress to interfere with the free and unlimited right of the people to select anyone possessing the constitutional qualifications would be a usurpation of power and a subversion of the Constitution justifying a revolution, which would immediately take place.

As before stated, no apprehension was felt that such interference would take place under the purely parliamentary power to judge of the qualifications of its members, but fears were expressed that the right of Congress to regulate the times, places, and manner of election might be used to influence or coerce the voters into favoring particular persons or classes. It was in answer to this claim that he said:

"We have seen that an incontrollable power over the elections for the Federal Government could not, without hazard, be committed to the State legislatures. Let us now see what are the dangers to be apprehended on the other side; that is, from confining the ultimate right of regulating its own elections to the Union itself. It is not pretended that this right would ever be used for the exclusion of any State from its share in the representation. The interests of all would, in this respect at least, be the security of all. But it is alleged that it might be employed in such a manner as to promote the election of some favored class of men to the exclusion of others; by confining the place of election to particular districts and rendering it impracticable for the citizens at large to partake in the choice. Of all chimerical suppositions this seems to be the most chimerical. On one hand, no rational calculation of probabilities would lead us to imagine that a disposition which a conduct so violent and extraordinary would imply, would find its way into the national council; and, on the other hand, it may be concluded with certainty that if so improper a spirit should ever gain admission into them, it would display itself in a form altogether different and far more decisive.

"The improbability of the attempt may be satisfactorily inferred from the single reflection that it will never be made without causing an immediate revolt of the great body of the people, headed and directed by the State governments. It is not difficult to conceive that this characteristic right of freedom may, in certain turbulent and factious seasons, be violated in respect to a particular class of citizens by a victorious majority, but that so fundamental a privilege in a country situated and enlightened as this is should be invaded to the prejudice of the great mass of the people, by the deliberate policy of the Government, without occasioning a popular revolution is altogether inconceivable and incredible. * * *

"As to the Senate it is impossible that any regulation of 'time and manner,' which is all that is proposed to be submitted to the National Government in respect to that body, can affect the spirit which will direct the choice of its Members."

If the Senate has the discretionary right to exclude a duly elected Senator from admission to its councils it has the right to deny to any State or to any number of States, less than a majority of all the States, representation in the National Senate. It can do exactly what Hamilton said could not be done without precipitating a popular revolution. One-third of its entire membership must apply for admission at its next regular session. If it has the right to exclude WILLIAM S. VARE, it has the same right to exclude the other thirty or more Senators whose terms of service begin with that session. Because if this right exists at all, it is absolutely discretionary; it is not exercised in pursuance of any provision of the Constitution or of any law of the United States; no limit is fixed within which it may operate and no standard is erected by which its operation may be measured.

It is simply arbitrary, uncontrolled discretion, utterly antagonistic to the fundamental principle of our political institution that we have a government of laws and not of men. If the Senate can arbitrarily, and in their uncontrolled discretion, say who shall or shall not be a Senator of the United States, then the people of the United States have no more agency in the election of their representatives in Congress than had the Roman people in the election of their emperor when the imperial office was filled by the sole election of the legions.

This utter subversion of the Constitution, this destruction of the right of the people of the respective States in their individual and collective capacity, can not be justified by the assumption of a superior virtue and intelligence on the part of the Senate. It is always the plea of despots that they can govern their subjects better than the subjects can govern themselves, and every excess of tyranny has been justified on the same ground.

It may be, it no doubt is, true that men of the education, intelligence, and patriotism of the Members of the Senate would be more able to choose fit men for high office than could the people generally. But it is not so written in the Constitution created by the people and establishing a government for the people. The people had and exercised the right to determine the frame of our National Government and to prescribe the qualifications of the persons who should represent the people in the legislative department.

In considering these qualifications Mr. Justice Story in his work on the Constitution (fifth edition, pp. 460–463) discusses this question and gives the following as his conclusion:

"It would seem but a fair reasoning upon the plainest principles of interpretation that when the Constitution so established certain qualifications as necessary for office it meant to exclude all others as prerequisites. From the very nature of such a provision the affirmation of these qualifications would seem to imply a negation of all others."

McCrary (Elections, sec. 625, p. 449) says:

"The power given to each House of Congress to 'judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members' does not authorize an inquiry into the moral character of a person elected and returned as a Member. Such an inquiry can only be made, if at all, in the prosecution of proceedings for expulsion. The term 'qualifications' as used in the Constitution means the constitutional qualifications, to wit, that the person elected and returned as a Member shall have attained the age of 25 years, been 7 years a citizen of the United States, and shall be an inhabitant of the State in which he shall be chosen."

This view of the correct interpretation of the Federal Constitution was not confined to statesmen and jurists contemporaneous with its adoption but has been stated in the Halls of the Senate by statesmen whose abilities and attainments were such as to command attention and respect.

In 1855 the right of Senator Trumbull to the seat to which he had been elected by the Legislature of Illinois was challenged on the ground that certain legislation of the State of Illinois had added to the qualifications found in the Constitution. Senator Crittenden thus answered these objections:

"According to the plain meaning of the Federal Constitution every inhabitant of a State 30 years of age, who has been 9 years a citizen of the United States, is eligible to the office of Senator. What more can be said about it? It is now supposed by those who contend that Mr. Trumbull is not entitled to his seat that it is competent for a State, by its constitution—and I suppose they would equally contend by any law which the legislature might from time to time pass—to superadd additional qualifications. The Constitution of the United States, they say, has only in part regulated the subject, and therefore it is no interference with that Constitution to make additional regulations.

"This, I think it will be plain to all, is a mere sophism when you come to consider it. If it was a power within the regulation of, and proper to be regulated by, the Constitution of the United States, and if that Constitution has qualified it, as I have stated, prescribing the age, prescribing the residence, and prescribing the citizenship, was there anything more intended? If so, the framers of the Constitution would have said so. The very enumeration of these qualifications excludes the idea that they intended any other qualifications."

In 1907 the right of Senator SMOOT was challenged on alleged grounds of disqualifications entirely outside of those enumerated in the Constitution, and in the discussion that took place Senator Knox condensed the whole subject into a few words when, in speaking of Senator SMOOT, he said:

"He was at the time of his election over 30 years of age and had been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and when elected was an inhabitant of Utah. These are the only qualifications named in the Constitution, and it is not in our power to say to the State, 'these are not enough; we require other qualifications,' or to say that we can not trust the judgment of the States in the selection of Senators, and we, therefore, insist upon the right to disapprove them for any reason."

When we consider the great number of Senators whose right to office has been challenged because of alleged disqualifications outside of those prescribed by the Constitution—Senators Robbins, Fitch, Goldthwaite, Lamar, Ingalls, du Pont, Morgan, Grover, Smith, Lorimer, Stephenson, Newberry, Brookhart, Trumbull, and Mayfield—it might be well for no aspirant to the Senate to hereafter lay the flattering unction to his soul that his right to the office would never be questioned; for let it be established as a precedent that a majority of the Members of the Senate may exclude him for any reason, or no reason at all, he may find out that a life of probity, honesty, and integrity and a strict and literal compliance with the laws of State and Nation constitute no defense to the unrestrained will of a majority of the Senate.

WILLIAM S. VARE is not claimed to be lacking in moral fitness; no charge of violation of any law has ever been made against him in his personal relations; no dereliction of duty is claimed to exist in the performance of his official functions; no proof or even reasonable suspicion that he ever spent a cent or authorized the sperding of a cent for any purpose of corruption or bribery, or for any other illegal or criminal purpose; no claim made that any law of the United States or of the State of Pennsylvania was violated in the collection or disbursement of his campaign fund. No claim made that at the primary of March 18, 1926, the Republican voters of the State of Pennsylvania were illegally influenced to prefer him over the other candidates; no claim that he did not receive a substantial majority of the votes cast for Senator at the general election in November, 1926, and not even a pretense that he is subject to any of the disqualifications of nonage, lack of citizenship of the United States, or inhabitancy of the State of Pennsylvania at the time of his election.

He had held the office of Representative in Congress for one of the Pennsylvania districts for 14 years, presumably a tribute to efficient and honest service rendered in that capacity; he had his own independent ideas upon things political, which he wished to test by his candidacy for the nomination as United States Senator, and while he personally expended money in a very considerable amount, there is neither claim nor proof that he spent anything but what was his own and every cent of it for a legitimate purpose.

Even had he possessed none of the qualifications for United States Senator, except those enumerated in the Constitution, and had had no long term of public service as a legislator, he would have had the undoubted right as an American citizen to present his claims for election to one of the highest offices known to the civilized world. He had the right to aspire to that exalted position, which many covet, but few attain, and to submit his claims and aspirations to the people of Pennsylvania, who were the sole and exclusive judges of the propriety of his election so long as he possessed the constitutional prerequisites.

When he received the necessary majority he became entitled, as a matter of right, to the enjoyment of the office for which he was elected. He had the right to feel that a legitimate ambition had been satisfied and that he would receive the rewards of dignity and honor which accompanied it. As a citizen of the United States he is entitled to enjoy this right; he is entitled to have his qualifications measured by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and he is entitled to hold and enjoy his exalted office, not by the mere will and sufferance of his fellow Members, but because, under the Constitution, he is a duly elected Senator of the United States.

To deprive him of these rights is to inflict upon him a personal wrong, a wrong in comparison with which ordinary civil wrongs would be insignificant, a wrong which should not be, and we believe will not be, inflicted by Senators who hold their offices by the same right which he claims for himself, the exercise of the will of the people and the protection of the Constitution of the United States.

II. THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES

The rejection of WILLIAM S. VARE from the exercise of an office to which he was legally elected would be a great personal wrong, depriving him of all the dignity, influence, and emoluments of a member of the most important legislative body in the world; it would deprive him of the opportunity to advocate in effective form perhaps the political principles and personal views which were ratified by a large majority of the citizens of Pennsylvania, and would deprive him of the gratification of a high, but laudable, ambition, fairly and honestly realized. In a country where every inhabitant may claim the legal right for redress for all manner of civil injuries, however unimportant or even insignificant, WILLIAM S. VARE would stand remediless for the wrongs inflicted upon him.

But WILLIAM S. VARE is only one citizen out of the millions of citizens of the United States who would suffer a loss of dignity, prestige, or profit by reason of the action of the Senate. If the Senate of the United States has the power to arbitrarily say that a person elected by the people and possessing all the qualifications required by the Constitution shall not be permitted to hold or exercise said office, then every citizen of the State of Pennsylvania has received an injury equally direct as that inflicted upon the Senator elected by that State; for while Senator-elect VARE would lose his right to hold office, the citizens of the State of Pennsylvania would be deprived of the fundamental right of an American citizen to vote at the election for Senators of the United States, and the citizens of that State collectively would be deprived of their constitutional right to be represented in the Senate by a person of their own choosing, and this wrong would be magnified in proportion to the number of citizens disfranchised.

As great or greater a wrong would be inflicted upon the citizens of the United States, in their individual and collective political capacities, because a precedent would be established which might at any election result in the disfranchisement of the voters of any State.

The right of every qualified citizen of the United States to vote for a Member of Congress or a United States Senator is a right not dependent upon the discretion or permission of either House of Congress, but is a right secured and guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, which together constitute "the supreme law of the land," of which they can not be lawfully deprived at the arbitrary will of either the execuive, judicial, or legislative departments.

The seventeenth amendment to the Constitution provides:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors for the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

It has never been decided or even contended that Senators of the United States could be elected by any other agency or in any other manner than that provided by said amendment, nor that prior thereto a Senator could be elected in any other manner than by the State legislature in conformity with the Constitution as it formerly stood.

In speaking of the exclusive method of election obtaining before the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, the Senate committee, in reporting on the right of Senator Stephenson to occupy the seat to which he was elected, said:

"When we speak of the election of a United States Senator under existing constitutional and legislative provisions, we contemplate only the election by the legislature of the State."

In the case of Henry B. Payne (1885) the committee reported:

"The State should execute its laws respecting the purity of the senatorial elections by the indictment and conviction of a single person, who bribes or is bribed, whether the election is affected or not. The State should investigate as well to the end of better laws and surer execution of the laws.

"The State, too, is charged with the maintenance of 'the honor of Ohio,' and its vindication rests with its own legislature, its own judiciary, and its own people; but it can not demand this vindication at the hands of the United States Senate except as they may flow from investigations by that body within the limits of its constitutional power and duties."

It is well said in United States v. Aczel (219 Fed. 917, 929):

"The seventeenth amendment to the Constitution and the statute just quoted are too recent to have received any judicial construction or interpretation, but so far as the right to vote for a Member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States is concerned, the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly decided that such right is fundamentally based upon and given and secured by the Constitution of the United States."

In Ex parte Yarbrough (110 U. S. 651, 4 Sup. Ct. 152, 28 L. ed. 274) there was involved the right of a negro to vote at an election for Representative of the United States and indirectly for the legislature which would select a Senator, or, as the court said:

"Stripped of its technical verbiage, the offense charged in this indictment is that the defendant conspired to intimidate Berry Saunders, a citizen of African descent, in the exercise of his right to vote for a Member of the Congress of the United States."

In holding that a single negro voter was not beneath the protection of the Constitution and laws, the court said:

"But it is not correct to say that the right to vote for a Member of Congress does not depend on the Constitution of the United States. The office, if it be properly called an office, is created by the Constitution and by that alone. It also declares how it shall be filled, namely, by election."

As to the claim made that the right to vote for Representatives in Congress depended upon the qualifications prescribed by the State legislatures for the election of members of its most numerous branch, and that therefore the right to vote for Members of Congress was given by the State and not the Nation and its violation could be punished by the State alone the court quotes Article I, section 2, of the Constitution, and proceeds:

"The States, in prescribing the qualifications of voters for the most numerous branch of their own legislatures do not do this with reference to the election for Members of Congress, nor do they prescribe the qualifications for voters for those eo nomine. They define who are to vote for the popular branch of their own legislature, and the Constitution of the United States says the same persons shall vote for Members of Congress in that State. It adopts the qualification thus furnished as the qualification of its own electors for Members of Congress. It is not true, therefore, that electors for Members of Congress owe their right to vote to the State law in any sense which makes the exercise of the right to depend exclusively on the law of the State."

Based upon this sound interpretation of the Federal Constitution as to the right of the qualified citizen to vote at elections for Members of the House of Representatives, the court upheld the conviction of nine men whose offense consisted in conspiring to deprive by intimidation a negro voter and citizen of the United States. Every citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, white or black, male or female, possessing the qualifications of electors for the most numerous branch of the legislature of that State had the same constitutional right to express his or her choice for Senator from that State. Can it be reasonably contended that this absolute constitutional right can be exercised effectually only when it results in the election of Members who are personae gratae to a majority of the United States Senate? Or can the specious claim be substantiated that, because this honorable body is made the judge of the questions as to whether an election actually took place and resulted in the choice of such Senator or to be the judge of the qualifications of the person so elected, the Senate therefore has the power to nullify and vitiate the exercise of this right of the elective franchise on the part of the millions of citizens taking part in the election?

In Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall. 178, 22 L. Ed. 631) the Supreme Court said:

"The right of suffrage, when granted, will be protected. He who has it can only be deprived of it by due process of law, but in order to claim protection he must first show that he has the right."

The Constitution itself confers upon the citizens of Pennsylvania the right to vote for Senators and Representatives, but what protection can there be to the effective exercise of that right if the Senate can nullify it under the plea that it is judging of the qualifications of its own Members?

In Wiley v. Sinkler (179 U. S. 58, 21 Sup. Ct. 17, 45 L. Ed. 84) the plaintiff sued an election board to recover damages for wrongfully and willfully rejecting his vote for a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States at the election held November 6, 1894, in which case the court thus describes the nature of the right of the citizen to vote:

"The right to vote for Members of the Congress of the United States is not derived merely from the constitution and laws of the State in which they are chosen, but has its foundation in the Constitution of the United States."

But how could it have availed the plaintiff in that case to be permitted to exercise the physical right of depositing his ballot if the election board had the right, in its discretion, to throw the ballot box and its contents into the fire immediately at the conclusion of the voting? Yet such an act would be no more destructive of the rights of the voter than would a determination of this body that a person duly elected, and his election properly certified, should not be permitted to hold the office for which he was elected.

The case of Swaford v. Templeton (185 U. S. 487, 22 Sup. Ct. 783, 46 L. Ed. 1005) was in all respects similar to the case last cited, and relying upon and affirming its doctrine the court said:

"It is manifest from the context of the opinion in the case just referred to that the conclusion that the cause was one arising under the Constitution of the United States was predicated on the conception that the action sought a vindication or protection of the right to vote for a Member of Congress, a right, as declared in Ex parte Yarbrough (110 U. S. 655), 'fundamentally based upon the Constitution (of the United States) which created the office of Member of Congress and declared that it should be elective, and pointed out the means of ascertaining who should be electors.' That is to say, the ruling was that the case was equally one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, whether the illegal act complained of arose from a charged violation of some specific provision of the Constitution or laws of the United States or from the violation of a State law which affected the exercise of the right to vote for a Member of Congress, since the Constitution of the United States had adopted, as the qualifications of electors for the Members of Congress, those prescribed by the State for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State."

Referring again to United States v. Aczel (219 Fed., l. c. 932) there is found the following clear statement applicable to this discussion:

"The right to vote for a Member of Congress, being a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, it is perfectly plain that the right to vote for a United States Senator, since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment of the United States Constitution and the passage by Congress of the act of June 4, 1914, is also a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. If the right to vote for a Representative in Congress or a Senator of the United States is a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, then it appears that the right and privilege to serve as a member of an election board where such Representative or Senator is to be elected is likewise a right or privilege secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. If a man has a right to vote, he has a right to have his vote received and counted by the proper election officers; otherwise the right to vote is but an empty right."

Is there anything of substance, is there more than a shadow of such right to vote, if its result and effect can be completely nullified by the action of this honorable body under a claim that it is judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its Members?

The legislatures of the various States have, from time to time, attempted to add qualifications or disqualifications with respect to Senators and Representatives beyond those laid down in the Constitution. One of the most striking of these instances occurred when the Legislature of the State of Ohio passed a law fixing a limit on the amount that might be spent by candidates for office (including Representatives in Congress) and declaring that the election of any person whose expenditures exceeded the limit so fixed should be void; it also subjected the offender to a fine not exceeding $1,000.

In State v. Russell, 10 Ohio Dec. 255, it appeared that the defendant was the nominee of his party for National Representative and expended more than the amount limited by the act. As he was defeated, the act, of course, could not operate to void his election, but he was prosecuted under the provision relating to the imposition of a fine. The district court sustained a demurrer to the indictment in an elaborate and well-written opinion, reviewing a great number of authorities, on the ground that in so far as it related to candidates for Congress, it was unconstitutional in its entirety, because it was beyond the power of the State to add any qualifications or disqualifications to those enumerated in the Constitution. The circuit court (20 Ohio C. C. Rep. 551) likewise held that the State had no power to make the election of a National Representative dependent upon compliance with a legislative requirement of the State of Ohio, but held that the portion of the enactment so providing was distinct and separable from the provisions providing for punishment by fine, and reversed the judgment of the lower court. Its ruling and argument on the applicable portion of the question is as follows:

"And then section 1 provides as to all persons, whether Members of Congress or to a person elected to an office within the State, that his election is to be unlawful and void, and he gets no right under it.

"Now, the first question for consideration is: Does that undertake to add to the constitutional qualifications of a person who may become a Member of Congress an additional disqualification. The qualifications will be well remembered—one pertains to his age and the other to his residence, the State in which he resides, and the other as to how long he has been a citizen of the United States. It has been held as to a greater number of conditions that have been added by the different States from time to time, that they have been to add disqualifications; for instance, that he should reside within his district, has been held to add a qualification; that he must be of a certain age, of a certain belief, or that he must be of a certain wealth, or anything of that kind—all these were added qualifications undoubtedly, but here we have something that is called a qualification on one side and contended on the other that it is a mere regulation of the election. And the question is: What is it? Is it not a qualification? This is certain: It is something that disqualifies a person from accepting the office. It removes him entirely from becoming a Congressman under that regulation. And it is hard to see how a person can be disqualified by anything unless that thing disqualifies him and adds something when it clearly does not come under the qualifications required by the United States. * * *

"To our minds, the law adds a circumstance; that is, the person who is elected must have it appear. The circumstance must exist that he has not violated this law, and in that sense which seems to be a generally accepted sense, not only generally by the people, but in the legal sense as well, we think that the qualification called for by section 6 of this article is an unlawful one. It might as well prescribe that he should not have violated some other law, and required him to make an affidavit that he had never stolen a horse, and had never been a thief, never been convicted of a crime—he might be called upon to show these by affidavit before he should be allowed to become a Member of Congress. It is perfectly apparent that a matter of that kind, or one that inheres in his character, would be adding to the constitutional requirements.

"And that being true, that part of the act would clearly be unconstitutional. But that provision that we find to be unconstitutional pertains only to those that deprive him of the office. That a person might be fined for violation of the law of the State need not exempt a Member of Congress or member of the State legislature; but, if the person has received the requisite number of votes, then for a State to step in and say whether that person should be a Member of Congress would entirely supersede the rights of that party under the United States Constitution."

The solution of the whole matter is found in the fact that the qualifications of Members of the National Congress are declared by the people, the ultimate sovereign, through the medium of the written Constitution of the United States which was agreed by the people should be the supreme law of the land. It could not be supreme if its creator, the people of the respective States, had retained power to change its provisions by the act of their State legislatures; nor would it be supreme if the power to annul or modify its provisions existed in the legislative bodies it created. The State legislature has a legitimate function in determining the qualifications of voters for its most numerous legislative body and thereby fixing the same qualifications for persons entitled to vote for representatives in both Houses of the National Congress, and it has a further legislative function in its primary duty of regulating the times, places, and manners of its election; Congress has a legitimate function to perform in supervising and regulating elections at which Members of Congress are chosen and of enacting every law that will promote the efficiency and integrity of such elections and protect every qualified voter in the exercise of his legal and constitutional rights.

But neither State legislature nor National Congress can add to or take from the plain and specific enumerations of qualifications of Representatives or Senators, for could they do so the Constitution would lose its supremacy and have no greater effect than an ordinary legislative enactment.

With the case just cited in mind, we call attention to the testimony heard by the special committee (Governor Pinchot, pp. 32, 39) describing the efforts that were made by Governor Pinchot to procure the enactment of a valid and effective corrupt practice act and his inability to do so.

Had such a law been enacted, compliance thereto could not have been compelled as a prerequisite to the right to hold the office of United States Representative or Senator without imposing qualifications within neither the letter nor spirit of the Constitution. If such a law had provided that in addition to being 30 years of age, 9 years a citizen of the United States, and an actual inhabitant of the State of Pennsylvania, the Representative or Senator must have complied with the provision of the corrupt practice act, could it be doubted that the State of Pennsylvania was making a vain and unconstitutional attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States by adding such additional qualifications.

If in order to obtain his certificate of election the newly elected Congressman would have been required to make an affidavit that he had spent no more than 10 cents per registered voter, how could it be denied that the State of Pennsylvania had added to the qualifications of Senators of the United States?

In No. 52 of the Federalist the qualifications of a Representative of the United States were stated, and would be equally applicable, with necessary changes, to Senators, and the following comment was made:

"Under these reasonable limitations the door of this part of the Federal Government is opened to merit of every description, whether native or adoptive, whether young or old, and without regard to poverty or wealth, or to any particular profession of religious faith."

Had Governor Pinchot succeeded in his just and laudable efforts to obtain a corrupt practice act for Pennsylvania, reasonably limiting the amount of campaign expenditures, we do not think it could be seriously contended that there could be annexed thereto a valid and legal condition that compliance with such act should be a prerequisite to the enjoyment of the office of Senator or Representative of the United States. But a further important and pertinent consideration is that no such law was passed; and in spending $71,000 in the distribution of literature to his constituents Mr. VARE violated no law of the State of Pennsylvania. Strictly speaking, he could have, without a statutory violation, spent ten or one hundred times that amount. And the further question arises, can the Senate of the United States make as a ground for exclusion the violation of a proposed law of the State of Pennsylvania which was never enacted? Or can it, under its power to judge of the qualifications of its members, require qualifications as to a limitation upon campaign expenses which it conceives are necessary and proper to be possessed by a Senator of the United States.

Sovereign States of the Union are not under the tutelage or guardianship of any of the departments of the National Government. They are restrained, so far as any restraint is laid upon them, by the terms of the Constitution itself, but within the sphere of their legitimate action they are as independent of the Federal Government as they are of the governments of Europe. If any State desires a corrupt practice act, it has the right to enact it and make it as drastic or lenient as it sees fit, and it has the exclusive option to remain without such a law. But its acting or failing to act in this respect has not the slightest effect or influence upon its relations to its own people in their right to constitutional representation in the National Congress, on one hand, or to the Union of States on the other, nor is it or should it be deprived of its just and proper representation in both Houses of Congress because it fails to pass or enforce a just corrupt practice act.

Representation in the National Congress is one of the most important and undoubted rights the several States possess, not only for the protection of the interest of the people of the State against Federal usurpation but in order that its own weight and influence may be felt either in the defeat or repeal of unjust laws or in the enactment of wise and salutary ones. This right of representation inheres in the very frame and structure of the Federal Constitution, which has always provided for equal representation of the States in the Senate, elected directly or indirectly by the people of each particular State.

This right is well stated in McCrary on Elections, section 188, page 139, where he quotes from the report of the committee on elections in two cases where the right of the chosen Member of the House of Representatives was challenged:

"Representation is one of the very essentials of a republican form of government, and no one doubts that the United States can not fulfill this obligation without guaranteeing that representation here."

How is it proposed in this proceeding to fulfill this obligation of guaranteeing to the State of Pennsylvania the representation to which it is entitled by the Constitution? By depriving her of the services of her duly elected and accredited Senator, whose constitutional qualifications are not denied, and who has without question been elected by the people thereof, who is charged with the commission of no crime nor any moral defect rendering him unworthy to discharge the duties of the Senatorship? His rejection would deprive Pennsylvania of half of her strength in the Senate until his successor should be appointed, for, according to the great weight of authority in this country (McCrary on Elections, pp. 247, 249), the disqualificataion of a Senator does not entitle his unsuccessful competitor to a seat.

If, then, Mr. VARE should be appointed by the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, by means entirely proper and not induced by the expenditure of a single cent, could the Senate again reject him on account of the expenditures made in the primary preceding the election which, as to him, was held void?

If such course is pursued uniformly by the United States Senate, there will necessarily occur a continual conflict between the people of the disfranchised State and the Senate, because such a conflict must result from the very nature of the controversy. Either the people of the State would be compelled to forego their right to choose their own representative or the Senate would be compelled to finally and ultimately accept a person whom they had perhaps repeatedly rejected as unfit.

In People ex rel. Leroy v. Hurlburt (24 Mich. 44) Judge Cooley, a great constitutional lawyer and judge, said:

"Mr. Justice Story has well shown that constitutional freedom means something more than liberty permitted; it consists in the civil and political rights which are absolutely guaranteed, assured, and guarded; in one's liberties as a man and a citizen—his right to vote, his right to hold office, his right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, his equality with all others who are his fellow citizens—all these guarded and protected and not held at the mercy and discretion of any one man or of any popular majority. (Story, Miscellaneous Writings, 620.) If these are not now the absolute right of the people of Michigan, they may be allowed more liberty of action and more privileges, but they are little nearer to constitutional freedom than Europe was when an imperial city sent out consuls to govern it.

"The men who framed our institutions have not so understood the facts. With them it has been an axiom that our system was one of checks and balances; that each department of the Government was a check upon the others, and each grade of government upon the rest; and they have never questioned or doubted that the corporators in each municipality were exercising their franchises under the protection of certain fundamental principles which no power in the State could override or disregard. The State may mold local institutions according to its views of policy or expediency, but local government is a matter of absolute right and the State can not take it away. It would be the boldest mockery to speak of a city as possessing municipal liberty where the State not only shaped its government but, at discretion, sent in its own agents to administer it; or to call that system one of constitutional freedom under which it should be equally admissible to allow the people full control in their local affairs or no control at all.

"What I say here is with the utmost respect and deference to the legislative department, even though the task I am called upon to perform is to give reasons why a blow aimed at the foundation of our structure of liberty should be warded off. Nevertheless, when the State reaches out and draws to itself and appropriates the powers which from time immemorial have been locally possessed and exercised and introduces into its legislation the centralizing ideas of continental Europe, under which despotism, whether of monarch or commune, alone have flourished, we seem forced back upon and compelled to take up and defend the plainest and most primary axioms of free government, as if even in Anglican liberty, which has been gained step by step, through extorted charters and bills of rights, the punishment of kings and the overthrow of dynasties, nothing was settled and nothing established."

This language of that learned jurist was used in defense of the people of a mere municipality in its right to self-government as against the usurpation of the State legislature. It was not founded upon any constitutional right of the people of a city to govern themselves, for no such right was expressed in the constitution of the State of Michigan, but was based upon the inherent right of the people of a city to govern themselves in consonance with the genius and theory of free popular government, even when asserted as against the State legislature to whom the city owed its creation and existence.

Its applicability to the lack of power of either House of the National Congress to deprive the people of the right to representation in the national councils is magnified and emphasized by the fact that the people of a State, in their sovereign capacity, do not owe their creation to the National Legislature, and that the authority of the National Government independently arises from the same source as does the State government, in that both are the creatures and creation of the people, and the authority each may exercise within the proper sphere of its action may be found in the same written Constitution, whereby certain powers are conferred upon the National Government and all others are reserved to the States and the people. With a due regard not only to the theory of free government but to the express words of the Constitution, no more power is given to the National Legislature to deprive the people of the States of the right to representation in the National Senate and House of Representatives, or to limit their free choice of the persons to be so chosen, than is given to the States to nullify the constitutional action of the National Legislature; in either case none. It is only by a scrupulous observance of the constitutional limitations placed on each that we can have the free government intended in our supreme law. Or, as was well said by Senator Knox in the case of Senator SMOOT:

"The perfection of human liberties under law will only be attained under the American Constitution when each of the dual sovereignties within its sphere exerts its powers to the utmost limits for the human weal; when the States and the artificial bodies they have created cease to deny and resist the rightful and full exercise of the national power over national affairs; when there is no attempt to encroach upon the undeniable reserved powers of the States for the aggrandizement of national power; when the people discriminate between wise policies designed to meet the imperative needs of modern conditions and demagogic assaults upon the foundations of the Republic for political and personal purposes; when the people shall not be vexed by unnecessary legislation about their daily affairs and normal conditions are undisturbed by ceaseless agitations—agitations fomented by ignorance and insincerity and misrepresenting those just and constitutional policies of the time, which had a due beginning, have a reason for their existence, and shall have a due ending when their work is accomplished."

The whole battle for free self-government has been a struggle for actual and effective representation in the legislative body, for the two things are synonymous. It began in England in the time of Simon de Montfort and continued for centuries, and it finally triumphed over arbitrary prorogations, despotic dissolutions, the corruption of placemen, the briberies of ministers, the unequal representation of the rotten borough system, and the tyrannical exclusion of duly elected members, until to-day the people of England govern themselves through their representatives in the House of Commons and brook interference from neither king nor lord.

In France there was no sign or vestige of popular representation for 160 years without the assembling of the States General, and the despotism of the kings who were the state was broken only when the peoples' representatives in the third estate demanded and received recognition.

In America the struggle began long before the Union was formed or independence was achieved. Denial or absence of legislative representation was the sole cause of the revolution, which, reduced to its simplest terms, was a revolt against obeying laws in which the people of the colonies had no share in making and against burdens which they had never consented should be imposed.

The existence of this right of the people of each State to be represented both in the House of Representatives and Senate is, of course, not denied, nor does anyone doubt of its necessity as an elementary essential of free self-government, nor would any Member of the Senate even think of maintaining the contrary.

But if Mr. VARE can be refused a seat in the Senate as a result of the investigations of the special committee, or because of any fact disclosed by that investigation, then such essential and necessary right of representation fades away into a mere shadow from which the substance has fled. Instead of being a perfect right to choose whomsoever the people of the State will, to judge for themselves of the moral, mental, and intellectual qualities of its representatives, subject only to the disqualifications imposed by the supreme law, it is whittled down to a mere theoretical right to nominate and present its candidates to the Senate or House of Representatives for their discretionary acceptance or rejection.

If either house of the National Congress can reject a duly elected representative of the State, who possesses all the constitutional qualifications, then the State has no right of selecting its own agent to serve it in either of these bodies, for a right to select subject to rejection by some other person or body is no right at all; it is merely advisory and on a par in authority and importance with the verdict of a jury in an equity case, conclusive on no one unless adopted by the chancellor, who has the same right to reject as he has to adopt.

It would place each State, in the election of its Representatives, in the same position as is the President of the United States when he makes an appointment which, under the Constitution, requires confirmation by the Senate. Can anyone say that the President has a right to appoint whomsoever he will as minister to a foreign country, when such appointment must be submitted to the Senate for confirmation or rejection? Or can anyone say that the Senate of the United States has the same supervisory power over the selection of a Senator of a particular State that it has over the appointments made by the President? Yet if the principle be sound that the Senate is not bound by the constitutional qualifications, but may, in its discretion, exact or require others, then it has the same supreme supervisory power over the election of Senators that it has over the appointments of the President.

That it would only use this supervisory power of negation in either case only on those rare occasions when the interests of public morality or the public welfare demanded it may well be true, but that would not be a justification for clear usurpation of power impliedly, if not expressly, denied by the Constitution.

The acts of rejecting an appointment of the President and rejecting an election of a Senator are identical. The President has the right to appoint whomsoever he will, the State has the right to elect whomsoever its people choose, but neither of these rights are conclusive. The Senate has the arbitrary and discretionary right to refuse to confirm the appointment of the President, and need avouch no reason for its action, and in the event of such failure to confirm the appointment remains a nullity. The power of the Senate in such appointments is without limit, but in the case of the election of a Senator, there are certain restrictions placed upon the right of the Senate to act. It can judge whether or not the Senator was actually elected, and whether or not he is 30 years of age, a citizen of the United States for nine years and an inhabitant of the State electing him, and if he is found lacking in these qualifications, properly and constitutionally reject him.

If the Constitution meant that the Senate should have the same unlimited and discretionary power of approval or rejection of elected United States Senators that it has over presidential appointments, the seventeenth amendment would have simply read:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for six years."

Can the Senate of the United States now act exactly as though the seventeenth amendment so read? Certainly not. When that amendment says that the Senators shall be "elected by the people," it, by this affirmative declaration, negatives and excludes the right of any supervisory power in any other body, and it certainly does not mean that Senators shall be elected by the people of the State and a majority of the Senators. It clearly says and plainly means that Senators shall be elected by the people, and by the people alone, subject only to the coordinate provisions of the Constitution that each Senator shall possess the qualifications which the supreme law of the land—supreme alike over the people of the State and Members of the Senate—says they shall possess.

In the case of Senator Robbins, the majority report of 1833 took so just and true a view of the powers of the Senate in this matter that we quote:

"Causes might arise to render the election voidable, and these are enumerated in the Constitution of the United States. We might inquire, Was the person elected 30 years of age at the time of his election? Had he been nine years a citizen of the United States? Was he, at the time of his election, a citizen of the State from which he shall have been chosen? Was the election held at the time and place directed by the laws of the State? These are facts capable of clear demonstration by proof, and in the absence of the requisite qualifications in either of the specified cases, or if the existing laws of the State regulating the time and place of holding the election were violated, the Senate, acting under the power to judge of the 'elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members,' might adjudge the commission of the person elected void, although in other respects it was legal and constitutional.

"But where the sovereign will of the State is made known through the legislature and consummated through its proper official functionaries in due form, it will be a dangerous exertion of power to look behind the commission for defects in the component parts of the legislature, or in the peculiar organization of the body, for reasons to justify the Senate in declaring its acts absolutely void. Such a power, if carried to its legitimate extent, would subject the entire scope of State legislation to be overruled by our decision, and even the right of suffrage of individual members of the legislature, whose elections were contested, might be set aside.

"It would also lead into investigations into the motives of members in casting their votes, for the purpose of establishing a charge of bribery or corruption in particular cases. These matters, your committee thinks, properly belongs to the tribunals of the State and can not constitute the basis on which the Senate could, without an infringement of State sovereignty, claim the right to declare the election of the Senator void, who possesses the requisite qualifications and was chosen according to the forms of law and the Constitution."

Immediately following the Civil War it was very properly thought that a person who had taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and had afterwards engaged in rebellion or insurrection against it, should be held disqualified from election as a Senator or Representative of the United States. The treasonable violation of such an oath, an attempt to destroy the Government whose Constitution he had sworn to support, was certainly as indicative of unfitness as would be the expenditure of a large amount of money in mailing letters to voters of a State whose support he sought. And the Congress of that day, actuated by a fierce partisan spirit and influenced by all the bitter hatred engendered by civil war, was disposed to apply the maxim, Vae victis, in all its rigor to the late enemies of the Government; but it did not entertain the idea that it might, by a mere exercise of arbitrary power, exclude a duly elected Senator or Representative possessed of the constitutional qualifications. It pursued the legitimate and constitutional method by applying to the people, the source of all legitimate power, for authority to exclude the foresworn, and the people conferred this authority by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment, reading as follows:

"SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House remove such disability."

This amendment added an additional disqualification to those already prescribed by the Constitution, something which was vain and useless surplusage if each House already possessed the power to exclude the very persons thus constitutionally disqualified under its power to judge of their qualifications.

Not only so, but this section of the amendment conferred on Congress the power, if it cared to exercise it, of removing such disabilities another piece of useless surplusage, if each House of Congress had the supreme, lawful power to be the sole judge of the qualifications of its Members.

We respectfully submit that this alleged supreme power to prescribe disqualifications of its own Members, as well as to judge of the existence of such qualifications in each particular instance, will not stand investigation. It is undoubtedly true that the rejected Senator or Representative might have no legal method of testing the rightfulness of the exercise of such power; that he might be deprived of his high office without any remedy at the hands of any other tribunal. But the fact remains that if the Senate of the United States is the sole judge of the qualifications a Senator should possess, then the Members of the Senate are absolved from all restraint of the Constitution they have sworn to support. If they can prescribe new constitutional requirements they can equally disregard the old ones. If they can say that a Senator shall not be permitted to take his seat because of disqualifications by reason of the fact that he has spent more than a certain amount of money in procuring his nomination, then it has equal power to say that a person 21 years old, or a nonresident of the State electing him, or an alien, shall be entitled to his seat in the Senate, notwithstanding the constitutional prohibitions, and it would have like power to say, in the face of the seventeenth amendment, that a person elected by the State legislature, instead of by the people, would be entitled to his seat.

In any of these supposed cases the Senate would have the same power to do any of these unconstitutional things as it would to deny Mr. VARE the right to his seat in the Senate because of excessive expenditures in the primary campaign. We say it would have the same power only in the sense that there would be the same lack of remedy in all of these supposed cases.

But there is a world-wide difference between the mere ability to inflict a wrong for which no remedy has been provided and a legal and constitutional power or right to do the same act. Congress has the power, in the sense of mere ability, to pass an unconstitutional and invalid statute, but it has no constitutional power or right to do so, even though the Supreme Court of the United States had not been invested with the power to declare such enactment invalid.

The rightful exercise or lawless usurpation of a power does not depend upon the question of remedy, but inheres in the thing itself, and it has always been supposed that the conscience of statesmen, who had sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, would be a sufficient guaranty that they would respect its limitations upon their action and not destroy it by the usurpation of power either impliedly or expressly withheld from them.

The power of the Senate to judge of the qualifications of its Members, as before remarked, is purely judicial in its nature, or, in the language of the Court of Appeals of New York, in People ex rel. Hatzel v. Hall (80 N. Y. 117, 123):

"The power thus given to each house of the legislature is a judicial power and each house acts in a judicial capacity when it exerts it."

There being no tribunal created with jurisdiction to review the exercise of this judicial power, the Senate of the United States, in passing upon the qualifications of its Members, is, to all intents and purposes, a supreme court, exercising the same power in this particular as is conferred upon the Supreme Court of the United States in general. The Supreme Court of the United States, within the limitations of its proper jurisdiction, whether original or appellant, is not subject or inferior to any other tribunal. Its decisions in all cases are absolutely final and conclusive, and if that court should render a decision directly contrary to the express provisions of the Constitution a party deprived of his rights thereby would be without remedy. But this mere ability to violate the Constitution of the United States has never been supposed to confer upon the Supreme Court the right or power to decide cases in violation of the Constitution and according to the individual views of the judges as to the justice of their decision. In a limited sense the Supreme Court has the power to render a decision which, in effect, would be utterly subversive of our political institutions, and its judges are restrained from so doing not by any fear of reversal of their judgment by a superior court or by its nullification from action taken by a coordinate department of the Government, but by the sense of their obligation to support and maintain the Constitution and observe its limitations, even though their individual judgments might dictate otherwise.

If the Supreme Court should by mandamus compel the Senate to recognize and seat a United States Senator whom the Senate had declared did not possess the constitutional qualifications, the Senate could not apply to any other court or to the Executive for a remedy or relief from such arbitrary and unconstitutional exercise of power by the Supreme Court, but the mere absence of a remedy would not extend the limits of constitutional jurisdiction either of the Supreme Court or of the Senate of the United States when acting judicially and sitting as a court to be "the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." How long would the Government last, or what would be the value of our Constitution if the Supreme Court of the United States should disregard its provisions, limitations, and restrictions for the mere reason that they could do so without being called to account?

We have several times referred to the case of Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 138), the first authoritative judicial pronouncement of the supremacy of the Constitution, and we again refer to it to show how far the members of the Supreme Court considered themselves bound by the limitations of the Constitution in the absence of right of review or appeal from their decision. They had held that Marbury was entitled to his office, that his deprivation was unjust and illegal, and that he should be protected in his vested rights. The only question was whether the Supreme Court could apply the remedy which Congress had attempted to put in their hands by resort to the remedy of mandamus.

If, with or without the authorization of Congress, the Supreme Court had issued its writ of mandamus to James Madison, none could have called the court in question for having done so; had it decided the scope and extent of its jurisdiction, according to its innate sense of justice and right, it would have issued such writ, for it had been convinced that a wrong had been committed for which a remedy should exist somewhere. There was nothing to prevent it from so doing, except the Constitution of the United States and the oaths of the justices to "administer justice * * * agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States."

With this oath in mind, as well as the temptation to disregard in the particular case, the court said:

"From these, and many other selections which might be made, it is apparent that the framers of the Constitution contemplated that instrument as a rule for the government of courts, as well as of the legislature.

"Why otherwise does it direct the judges to take an oath to support it? That oath certainly applies in an especial manner to their conduct in their official character. How immoral to impose it on them, if they were to be used as the instruments, and the knowing instruments, of violating what they swear to support. * * *

"Why does a judge swear to discharge his duties agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, if that Constitution forms no rule for his government, if it is closed upon him and can not be inspected by him?

"If such be the real state of things, this is worse than solemn mockery. To prescribe, or to take this oath becomes equally a crime."

And may we suggest, without offense, that the oath of true men, chosen to fill the high office of a Senator of the United States, to support and maintain the Constitution, is a sufficient guaranty that they will subordinate their private judgments and individual wishes to the will of the people embodied in the instrument they have sworn to support.

If the rejection of Mr. VARE or the disfranchisement of the people of Pennsylvania, in that particular instance, was all that was involved in the present controversy it would make little difference a few years hence how the matter was settled. But the establishment of a principle that either House of Congress is the sole, arbitrary, and discretionary judge of the right of its Members to the office to which they have been elected, regardless of and unrestrained by the limitations of the Constitution, will work a revolution of our political system and will bring about results so important and far-reaching as to commend careful consideration on the part of the Members of each House before it is established.

The result what might follow the application of this principle is illustrated by a glance at the Pennsylvania elections alone. If this principle should be applied by the Senate to the exclusion of Mr. VARE, the House of Representatives would be entitled, perhaps tempted, to make a similar application of it to the 36 Members of that body elected from Pennsylvania, possibly every one of whom was a beneficiary of the campaign expenditures in that State equally with Mr. VARE or Senator Pepper, with the result that Pennsylvania would be denied one-half of its representation in the Senate and its entire representation in the House of Representatives.

Not only so, but the same principle applied by the legislative bodies of the State of Pennsylvania would nullify the election of 25 members of the State senate and 208 members of the State house of representatives who are also beneficiaries of the money spent in the Pennsylvania primaries.

This principle, if once established, would grow and increase in influence and be multiplied in the number of its applications, for it is a doctrine admirably fitted to serve the purposes of a majority in any legislative body where it obtains. Resting solely in discretion and without any limitation and not subject to review or restraint by any other body, officer, or tribunal, there would be the constant temptation to apply it to the exclusion of anyone who for reasons, personal or political, was opposed by a majority of the Senate or House of Representatives. It could be used to reject this Senator on account of his religion, to that Senator because he was in favor of prohibition, or to another because he was opposed to it. Under this assumption of power the right of three Senators elected or appointed has been challenged, and in the future it is possible that one-third of the entire Membership of the Senate might in any Congress be subjected to the same challenge.

For instance, if there existed a substantial majority in the Membership of the House in favor of the Republican Party, but by a revulsion in public feeling all of the newly elected Senators were Democrats, would it be a very difficult matter to persuade this majority that the newly elected Members suffered under some disqualifications, outside of the constitutional enumerations, which made it the patriotic duty of the Republican majority to prevent them from taking their seats? Or, if a Democratic majority was threatened in the same manner, what would be to prevent them from applying this same principle, and excluding the Members chosen, and all the appointees nominated by the governors to fill the vacancies caused by such exclusion? Because, if you once admit the principle of unrestrained, arbitrary control over the election of Senators, you can place no limit on its exercise. The recognition of this principle as a working factor of our Government is the sowing of dragon's teeth from which will spring forth armed man to destroy the contrary principle of government by the people under the restrictions and limitations of a written Constitution they have established.

We have endeavored in this argument to speak plainly, and we have no fears that what we have said will be misconstrued or distorted into any semblance of disrespect for the Senate or this committee, any more than would a proper challenge to the jurisdiction of a court be considered as contempt to the judge to whom it is addressed. We conceive it is the right of every citizen, the humblest as well as the highest, to appeal to the Constitution and invoke its protection. We believe it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to call attention to its infraction, and, if denied other remedy, he can at least appeal against the removal of the ancient landmarks and to counsel an observance of our great charter, the preservation of which is essential to the protection of the rights of the citizen; and to protest against the introduction of a principle which will deny the free choice by the people of each State of their representatives in the national councils—a power which would render the sovereign States inferior and subservient to the will of the majority of the members of any legislative body, and which would mark the beginning of the end of constitutional government in America.

It must be taken as admitted or conceded that WILLIAM S. VARE possesses all the qualifications required by the Constitution of the United States for a Member of the United States Senate, and that he was elected by the people of the State of Pennsylvania. In the defense of his own rights as a citizen of the United States and on behalf of the people of Pennsylvania, who have honored him with election, he appeals to this committee and to the Senate to judge him by the Constitution of the people of the United States—the fundamental law supreme over all its creatures and agencies—which every Senater has sworn to support and maintain.

III. THE RIGHTS OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Constitution provided, Article I, section 3:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote * * *."

The seventeenth amendment provides, Article XVII:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

In the Constitutional Convention it was first proposed that the legislatures of the several States should nominate a list of eligibles and that from this list of eligibles the Federal House of Representatives or the President should make the final selection. This proposal was ultimately superseded by Article I, section 3, quoted above, and as evidence of the fact that the representation of each State in the Senate was recognized as an inherent and inalienable right, the framers of the Constitution included in Article V, relating to amendments, the prohibition "and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

In the exercise of its power to judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own Members, the Senate is about to examine the returns made pursuant to the law of the State of Pennsylvania of the election held November 2, 1926. If these returns show after investigation what they now show on their face, that Mr. VARE was elected by an overwhelming majority—and we are confident that the investigation will establish this fact—then we have the case of a State which has conducted an election in accordance with its own and the Federal law and has chosen its ambassador to be one of its two representatives guaranteed to it by the Constitution.

We submit that any action by the Senate which goes beyond the determination of the election of Mr. VARE in accordance with Federal and State law, and of his qualifications as enumerated in the Constitution, would be a clear violation of the right guaranteed to the State of Pennsylvania as an entity to its full representation by two Senators in the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

HAROLD B. BEITLER,
M. J. MCENERY,
Attorneys for William S. Vare.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the statement has been made that there was no valid election in Pennsylvania. I do not believe I will venture to refer to the statements which appear in the press of Pennsylvania and made by prominent people in that State; but the real question has been discussed fully, a committee of the Senate has reported evidence and findings, and it is claimed, as I have stated, that Mr. VARE has not been properly chosen as a Senator from Pennsylvania. Without going into the merits of the controversy at all there is enough before us to overcome the prima facie effect of his certificate and have those questions go to the committee to be investigated and considered and reported upon. It would, therefore, be unfair to Mr. VARE and to his friends for me to read what I have before me here on that subject, and I will not attempt to do so. That is a matter, however, that is not concluded by the certificate that has been presented to the Senate. In view of what the committee has done, in view of its report, in view of what it has ascertained with regard to the election there, the prima facie effect of the certificate is overcome, it seems to me, and the matter ought to be investigated by a committee before the certificate can be recognized and be considered as entitling Mr. VARE to a seat in the Senate.

Reference has been made to the Lorimer case, just as if a question similar to the one now pending had been raised when Mr. Lorimer was sworn in. Mr. Lorimer took the oath of office here on June 18, 1909. It was not until January 9, 1911, that Mr. Beveridge offered his resolution to the effect that Mr. Lorimer had been corruptly elected and was not entitled to a seat. Mr. Lorimer sat here for nearly two years before that question was raised in January, 1911. The Senate adopted the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections declaring that Mr. Lorimer's election was valid and that he was entitled to his seat March 1, 1911. After that the Senate proceeded to accomplish what, in my judgment, has always been a most cruel and unjust thing. A resolution was introduced on May 20, 1912, again to the effect that Mr. Lorimer had been corruptly elected and was not entitled to his seat, and the Senate on July 12, 1912, reversed its previous action. Mr. Lorimer's seat was declared vacant, though he had been here in this body from June 18, 1909, to July 12, 1912. The Senate had once voted that he was entitled to his seat, that he had been honestly and fairly elected a Senator, but reversed its action subsequently and declared his seat vacant.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was not that on the ground of newly discovered evidence?

Mr. FLETCHER. It was on the ground of alleged newly discovered evidence, but the alleged newly discovered evidence did not develop at the hearing; there was no more proof of corruption or fraud under the second investigation than there had been on the first. I, myself, think that that case was wrongly decided by the Senate; that the Senate was correct in the first instance; and that by reason of the change of personnel in this body the action of the Senate was reversed. There was no question raised at all when Mr. Lorimer's credentials were presented here as to the validity of his election. He sat here for nearly two years before that question was raised. So we have a different situation here in this instance.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. President, while I generally disagree with the political opinions of the New York World, yet I generally read its editorials, because I enjoy seeing the opinions of my political opponents expressed so forcefully and clearly as they always are in its columns. I ask unanimous consent that an editorial printed this morning in the New York World on the subject of the Senate's power over these cases may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. President, although I dislike to take the time of the Senate, I should like to read the concluding paragraph of the editorial, which is as follows:

The ultimate question, therefore, is whether a majority of a quorum of the Senate may reverse the decision of a plurality of the voters of Illinois on a question not of law but of the proprieties. The State of Illinois has no law against the Smith-Insull transaction. The United States has no law against it. A plurality of the voters, after fair warning and full debate, have consented to it. By what right, then, does a majority of the Senate presume to declare that the offense is great enough to warrant a refusal to seat Mr. SMITH and thus to deny Illinois the representation to which it is entitled?

It is acting upon the theory of Senator REED that in admitting Members "the power is absolute." He does not merely claim, mind you, that the Senate may by law fix the qualifications of Senators. He claims that the Senate may in each instance, without previous notice, for reasons undeclared and unexplained, invent ex post facto such reasons as it chooses.

This claim to absolute power is, in our opinion, lawless in spirit, dictatorial in character, in violation of the Federal character of this Government, and a direct challenge to the principle of representative government.

The editorial entire is as follows:

[From The New York World, December 9, 1927]

"THE POWER IS ABSOLUTE"

By a vote of 53 to 28 the Senate on Wednesday refused to recognize the certificate of election presented by FRANK L. SMITH of Illinois.

Mr. SMITH was the winner of the election of 1926, in which he polled 772,467 votes against 716,389 votes which were cast for Mr. Brennan, the Democratic candidate, and 143,426 for Mr. Magill, an independent Republican candidate.

Mr. SMITH ran as the regular Republican candidate. He became the regular Republican candidate as a result of his victory in the Republican primaries, held April 13, 1926. In these primaries he defeated the late Senator William B. McKinley by a vote of, roughly, 600,000 to 475,000.

About eight days before the Illinois primaries were held Senator REED of Missouri submitted a resolution calling for a special committee of five Senators to investigate campaign expenditures in the Senatorial primaries. On May 17, a month after the Illinois primary, this committee, known as the Reed Committee, was established by the Senate. It began almost at once to investigate the Illinois primaries and had concluded its hearings by August 5, 1926. This was three months before Mr. SMITH'S election.

The Reed Committee's investigation disclosed that Senator McKinley, the loser, had spent $514,143, divided as follows:

McKinley's personal contribution	$350,000
Total minor contributions (estimated)	5,000
National Republican Committee of Cook County (known as the Deneen group)	159,143
Total	514,143

It disclosed also that FRANK L. SMITH, the winner, had spent a provisional total of $458,782. About 25 per cent of this money came from Mr. SMITH and his campaign manager. About 70 per cent came from "traction powers and public utility owners," of whom the most conspicuous was Mr. Samuel Insull. Mr. SMITH, who took this money from public-utility owners, was then "chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, which is empowered by law to fix the rates and control the operation of public utilities in the State of Illinois."

This transaction was, in our opinion, disgraceful and deserves the severest rebuke. The question is whether it disqualifies Mr. SMITH as Senator from Illinois. In answering this question it is necessary, we believe, to consider the following circumstances:

(a) The State of Illinois, according to the Reed Committee, has no statute restricting the amount which may be expended by any candidate, nor any law requiring the candidates or their committees to file a statement of such expenditures.

(b) The Federal corrupt practices act has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Newberry case, and there is no duty imposed by Federal law to file a statement of expenditures with the United States Senate.

(c) It is not alleged, therefore, that Mr. SMITH violated either State or Federal law in accepting campaign contributions from Mr. Insull.

(d) The Reed committee produced no evidence that the money received by Mr. SMITH was corruptly spent either in the primaries or in the election.

The whole question turns, therefore, on the propriety of his having accepted money from a utility magnate in view of the fact that as chairman of the commission he had officially to fix rates on public utilities. If we are correctly informed, it is wholly a question of propriety. There is no law in Illinois and there is no Federal law on the subject. If we had as voters to decide the question of propriety, we should unqualifiedly condemn Mr. SMITH. But the question was submitted to the electorate of Illinois. It was debated for at least three months. An independent candidate was run against Mr. SMITH on this precise issue. A plurality of the voters thereupon chose Mr. SMITH at an election the honesty of which is not questioned.

The ultimate question, therefore, is whether a majority of a quorum of the Senate may reverse the decision of a plurality of the voters of Illinois on a question not of law but of the proprieties. The State of Illinois has no law against the Smith-Insull transaction. The United States has no law against it. A plurality of the voters, after fair warning and full debate, have consented to it. By what right, then, does a majority of the Senate presume to declare that the offense is great enough to warrant a refusal to seat Mr. SMITH and thus to deny Illinois the representation to which it is entitled?

It is acting upon the theory of Senator REED that in admitting Members "the power is absolute." He does not merely claim, mind you, that the Senate may by law fix the qualifications of Senators. He claims that the Senate may in each instance, without previous notice, for reasons undeclared and unexplained, invent ex post facto such reasons as it chooses.

This claim to absolute power is, in our opinion, lawless in spirit, dictatorial in character, in violation of the Federal character of this Government, and a direct challenge to the principle of representative government.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not know the full purport of the editorial other than the paragraphs which were read by the Senator from Massachusetts, but from those paragraphs, which were read by the Senator, it appears that the New York World, in substance, takes the position that the Senate has no right to expel a Senator even after he has once been admitted here and has taken the oath of office merely because the State has no law prescribing a limitation of campaign expenditures, as is contended in the case of the State of Illinois. I differ radically with the views of the New York World upon the issues involved. Excessive expenditures in elections, the corruption of elections, if permitted to go on in this country will be one of the most undermining evils which can threaten the Republic.

In proceeding with the Newberry case the Senate after he had been sworn investigated his election. There had been no investigation prior to the time when he took the oath. In that case the Senate declared by resolution that the expenditure of a sum in the neighborhood of $200,000, as was proven, was detrimental to good government, was demoralizing, and threatened our public institutions, and, therefore, that Mr. Newberry should not be allowed to retain his seat in the United States Senate. So far as the facts which have been developed are concerned, we have before us now cases that are not unlike the Newberry case. The difference lies merely in the matter of procedure. In both the Illinois and Pennsylvania cases, it having come to the attention of the Senate that there had been corruption or alleged corruption and that there had been excessive expenditures in connection with the campaigns, the Senate saw proper to investigate the matter following the primaries and appointed a committee for that purpose. That committee carried on quite a thorough investigation and gave all the parties interested an opportunity to be heard as to their guilt or innocence upon the charges which had been made through the press and by individuals in those States, respectively.

It has been argued here as though we were taking snap judgment on the Senators designate that we were not giving them an opportunity here to be heard. That is contrary to the facts and to the record. As disclosed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in presenting this matter some days ago, investigations were carried on, witnesses were heard, the Senators designate were permitted to appear before the committee, were given every opportunity to present their side of the case, and after a fair, open investigation had been conducted and a fair hearing had been accorded by the Senate committee—and I do not think that anyone will charge that the hearings were not fair or that the committee did not try to ascertain the facts—the committee reached the conclusion that the Senator designate from Illinois and the Senator designate from Pennsylvania should be denied the privilege of taking the oath of office when they presented themselves to the Senate.

The committee reported the facts. So it is useless to say that the gentlemen in question have not been heard, and nobody who knows anything about these cases will so contend.

One Senator this morning talked as if he considered that the Senate is taking snap judgment on these gentlemen; that we are railroading them, and wanted to convict them without a hearing. Such a contention is not supported by the facts and the procedure in these cases. There was, I repeat, a hearing conducted by a committee authorized and directed by the Senate to act, and as a result of the investigation by that committee the facts were developed that there had been excessive expenditures in the election of these candidates. In Pennsylvania, I believe, the amount was about $800,000, and close to a million dollars in the State of Illinois.

On yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who takes pleasure this morning in presenting an editorial from the New York World, said it is not a question of the amount of money but is merely a question of what the money is spent for; that a million dollars could better be spent for certain purposes than a hundred dollars for some other certain purpose. I admit that a hundred dollars may be corruptly used, but ordinarily small expenditures are not corrupt. On the other hand, large and excessive expenditures are always corrupt. What greater crime could there be than trying to buy public office? Of course, if we wish to set a minimum of eight hundred thousand upon campaign expenditures in this country, we will place it there if the Senate by its action accepts as proper such expenditures as those which were made in these particular instances, and if we are going to place a minimum upon campaign expenditures and say that no man may be a candidate for United States Senator unless he can spend a million dollars in the larger States and perhaps two or three hundred thousand dollars in the smaller States, we had just as well write a new provision in the Constitution in regard to the qualifications for United States Senators. We might as well say the door of opportunity for a poor man or a man of moderate means is forever closed, and that only the rich or those who will sell themselves for financial backing shall be eligible for high public office.

The security of our Republic is found in the maintenance of honest, clean, and uncorrupted elections; the administration of public office as a public trust; and the condemnation to oblivion of those who would attempt to buy public office, to corrupt elections, to use public office as a private chattel for their own enrichment and self-aggrandizement.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment, just for a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. Does my memory fail me or not when I recall, or suppose I recall, the fact that in the Newberry case the expenditures were mainly for publications in one form or another? Is that so or is it not so?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think to quite an extent, and for what they called campaign workers and hired workers in different localities—I would call them grafters and ward heelers. I call a man a grafter and a ward heeler who says he has got to have $500 to look after the situation over in ward 1 and puts $499 in his own pocket and spends about $1 treating the other fellows to lemonade and cigars. I denounce as a grafter a man who will sell his influence for $5 or $10 a day during a campaign. There was a good deal of that carried on in the Newberry campaign, and I have no doubt a great deal of similar corruption was carried on in Pennsylvania and in Illinois elections. And, too, think of the methods of the political machine in Philadelphia. A lot of officeholders supported by the taxpayers' money. An indignant and outraged people will yet arise and smash that machine, which is as a leech on the back of the taxpayers of that city.

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I want to get back to the Newberry case.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I understand the Senator's point.

Mr. BRUCE. The point I make is that the expenditures in the Newberry case that were opprobriously condemned by the Senate were the very sort of expenditures that have met with the unqualified approval of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. TRAMMELL. Absolutely. Well, I disapprove very much of the class of expenditures in the Newberry case. As I recall, they hired what they called political workers. What is hiring political workers? Should not the electorate of this country be allowed to go ahead uninfluenced and unbiased as to whom they should support or vote for, without some man coming around and telling them that he will pay them $10 a day to distribute circulars, or he will pay them $10 a day or $50 a day for the use of their automobiles in going out and bringing voters to the polls, and all such expenditures as that? Large expenditures are usually to buy up—to mislead and deceive the voters—and I never knew of a single instance where the campaign bag of gold was for the public good.

I have been fighting every form of election corruption in my State all through my public career, and I am going to keep on fighting it both there and in the United States Senate. I shall continue to condemn all efforts to buy public office and those who are in office who regard public office as a private chattel.

I knew of a concrete case where a man down in my State, an old man who was fairly respected, thought to be a very good man, dropped into my office one day when I was a young lawyer down in Lakeland, Fla., my home town, and said, "TRAMMELL, I have been thinking about supporting Mr. A for a certain office," a prominent office. "In fact, I have been rather impressed that he was the right man for the office; but," he said, "you know, a fellow came to me the other day and told me that if I would take my horse and buggy"—this was before the day of the automobile and the wonderful roads we now have in Florida—"and drive down through certain precincts and distribute some of his circulars, he would give me $10 a day for five days." He said, "You know, I can't make over a dollar and a half or two dollars a day, and I think I will accept the proposition. Of course, it means that I have got to support the man that the money is coming from." So the candidate bought this old fellow in that way; and that is one of the popular methods used in different States—no doubt used in Pennsylvania, no doubt used in Illinois. I know that is one of the methods that was used in connection with the Newberry campaign. The records disclose that.

The free, uncorruptible and patriotic electors, who are in a large majority in my State, are strongly against the candidate who places the dollar above manhood and character and faithful service. They are against all forms of election corruption and abhor and despise political machines of the variety supported by the taxpayers' money or that may be fostered in any other way. The form of corruption practiced in Illinois and Pennsylvania was most reprehensible—direct buying of votes and influence; indirect buying of influence and votes, and the officeholders, political machine greased with taxpayers' money, were all in play.

What chance has an honest man who is above that kind of campaign conduct; or, on the other hand, if he is not above it, if he is a man without means, what chance has he when he is contending with money when they are carrying on such campaign procedure as that?

As far as I am concerned, I think I will do much less offense to my conscience in regard to the Constitution under the given circumstances we are dealing with by denying the oath to these Senators designate than I will by putting the stamp of approval upon the expenditures and the character of campaigns that were conducted which brought them here as Senators designate.

I believe that it will do less harm, if any harm is to be done, to exclude them, regardless of this argument about the constitutional question that we must allow a man to take his seat and then afterwards consider whether or not we will expel him from the Senate, than it will to place the stamp of approval upon the character of campaigns which resulted in them coming here and presenting themselves for the purpose of taking the oath of office.

If we are going to go ahead and approve this kind of conduct, then we can expect it to spread and get worse and worse, and completely undermine our elections and undermine our institutions. I believe the better plan is to deny the seat, and put others on notice that hereafter, whenever they seek a place in the United States Senate, they must come here with clean hands; that they must have carried on their campaigns in an honest, open, fair, and legitimate way, without trying to purchase the seats which they are seeking in this body. Put on notice all who read that a seat in the United States Senate can not be bought as you would buy stock on the stock exchange.

As far as the political aspect is concerned, I hope nobody is being actuated from that standpoint. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] said that of course this matter ought to be handled without regard to partisan considerations; and I think so myself. "But," he said, "what will the country think when the Senate is composed of 47 Democrats and 47 Republicans with Mr. VARE, and only 46 Republicans and 47 Democrats without Mr. VARE? Will not the country think the Democrats do not want Mr. VARE in, so that they will have control of the Senate?"

If you stop there, that sounds all right; but, on the other hand, what will the country think about the Republicans trying to put Mr. VARE in a seat in the United States Senate when he comes here with such a tainted record as he has in connection with his campaign? May you not as well say that the country will say, "The Republicans are willing to approve this conduct on Mr. VARE's part. They are willing to approve these unreasonable campaign expenditures and all kinds of election corruption, so that the Republicans can control the Senate." It is just as logical to say that as it is to intimate that the country would say that the Democrats wanted to exclude him so that they could organize the Senate.

As the Senator from Pennsylvania says, I hope, of course, that the matter will be determined without reference to any partisian considerations whatever; and I do not think the country is going to think very much about the question of Republican control or Democratic control. Nor are the people going to seriously consider these hair-splitting, twilight-zone constitutional questions.

What the country is going to think about is the disposition of this question upon the basis of the large expenditures that were made and the corruption that was carried on in connection with the election. I believe that, regardless of the Republican or Democratic issue, the country at large feels that the Senate should preclude these men from having seats in the United States Senate.

In my opinion we have the constitutional right to reject them; we should do so and thus deal a staggering blow to those who would buy up and corrupt elections.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. Does not the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] altogether lose sight of the fact that the Smith resolution was largely supported by Republican Members of this body, and also the fact that not an inconsiderable number of Democrats voted against that resolution? I do not see how the action of the Senate on the Smith resolution could be possibly referred to merely partisan motives.

Mr. TRAMMELL. We must not lose sight of that fact. In fact, a Republican offered the resolution.

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] also loses sight of the fact that of course the only effect of ousting Mr. VARE or Mr. SMITH would be to give the Governors of Pennsylvania and Illinois the opportunity to send to this body two men worthy of its loftiest traditions.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thank the Senator very much. I fully agree with his remarks on that question. I had hoped that the question would not be a partisan question at all; that we would act upon the facts and upon what we believe will be for the best interest of our country. I believe it is for the best interest of the Nation, whenever instances of this kind come to our attention, to make it plain that the United States Senate looks with disfavor upon the use of excessive sums of money for the purpose of influencing an election, and that it looks with disfavor upon any form of election corruption. We can not put the stamp of disapproval upon such conduct as that if, with the facts before us as presented by the committee, we now vote to seat Mr. VARE and take up the matter of further consideration at a later date.

For these reasons, feeling that we have ample facts, that there has been a fair investigation, and that these men have had every opportunity of a hearing, I am going to vote for the resolution denying the seat to Mr. VARE, just as I would vote to expel him if he had already gotten into the Senate.

As to this argument in regard to not having the right to preclude him from taking the oath, it seems to me, if you are going to apply that in its last analysis, that you might just as well say that after he once gets in we can not expel him. If the Senate is going to deny that he has a right to his seat after he once takes the oath, it will have to base its position entirely upon the same conditions and facts upon which we will now deny him the right of taking the oath. If we have not the right to deny him the privilege of taking the oath, then would we have the right, under the constitutional contention that is made, to expel him after he had once been seated?

I am satisfied with the facts. I am satisfied that corruption was carried on in connection with the election; that there were excessive expenditures; that there has been a fair hearing given; and an opportunity for hearing for the Senator designate. For these reasons I shall support the resolution denying him the privilege of taking the oath.

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McKellar	Sheppard
Barkley	Fletcher	McLean	Shipstead
Bayard	Frazier	McMaster	Shortridge
Bingham	Gerry	McNary	Simmons
Black	Gillett	Mayfield	Smith
Blaine	Glass	Metcalf	Smoot
Blease	Goff	Moses	Steck
Bratton	Gould	Neely	Steiwer
Brookhart	Greene	Norbeck	Stephens
Broussard	Hale	Nye	Swanson
Bruce	Harris	Oddie	Thomas
Capper	Harrison	Overman	Trammell
Caraway	Hawes	Phipps	Tydings
Copeland	Hayden	Pine	Tyson
Couzens	Heflin	Pittman	Wagner
Curtis	Howell	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Dale	Johnson	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Deneen	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Watson
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Edwards	King	Sackett	Willis
Ferris	La Follette	Schall

Mr. BRATTON. I rise to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. JONES of New Mexico] on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HOWELL. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is ill and detained at his home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the extraordinary inconsistency of those on the other side of the aisle who oppose the pending resolution, and vehemently argue that Mr. VARE should be instantly seated deserves the attention of the Senate.

But before we consider this inconsistency let us thank the able Senator from Pennsylvania for his gratuitous warning that the country may criticize Democrats who vote for the Norris resolution on the ground that they are playing petty partisan politics. Let us remind the Senator that we shall fear no accusations of partisanship based upon the fact that we have supported the resolution offered by Mr. NORRIS, who is one of the most patriotic, able, and illustrious Republican Member of this body. Indeed, the Senator from Nebraska is such a commanding figure in his party that an important group of his Republican colleagues in the Senate have recently been impelled to urge him to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for President.

The above-mentioned inconsistency arises from the following circumstances: In January, 1926, the Senate decided what is commonly called the Nye case. Mr. NYE appeared here as a Senator designate from the State of North Dakota, armed with a certificate of appointment which had been duly executed by Governor Sorlie, and which was admittedly perfect in form.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. Always to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The question involved in that case was of the power of the governor to appoint, was it not?

Mr. NEELY. I purpose to explain what the question was. A number of reasons were assigned for the action of those who opposed the seating of Mr. NYE, and who now assert that we shall violate the Constitution and outrage the State of Pennsylvania if we refuse to seat Mr. VARE. The principal objection to the administering of the oath of office to Mr. NYE, whose reputation was spotless, whose record was perfect, and whose certificate was in due form, was based upon the contention that, although the State of North Dakota had by constitutional enactment provided that the governor of the State could, in the case of a vacancy in the State's representation in the United States Senate, fill the vacancy by appointment, yet because the Legislature of North Dakota had not enacted a new law on the subject after the adoption of the seventeenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, the governor was without authority to fill a vacancy in the Senate by appointment. In other words, it was contended that because the Legislature of North Dakota, after the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, failed to reenact a law which had been continuously in force in the State from 1889 to and including the date of the execution of Senator NYE's certificate of appointment, the certificate was invalid and the appointment was void.

The Senators who have spoken in favor of admitting Mr. VARE to the Senate now and investigating his case afterwards voted to exclude Mr. NYE without any sort of an investigation. They then said, in effect, "You will violate the Constitution if you let Mr. NYE come into the Senate." They now say, "You will violate the Constitution if you keep Mr. VARE out of the Senate." What a convenient Constitution! What a fair and logical construction of that great instrument! And let us always remember that Mr. NYE's appointment was untainted, while Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, has certified to the Senate that he does not believe that Mr. VARE was duly chosen; that he is convinced that Mr. VARE's nomination was partly bought and partly stolen.

Let me call the names of those on the other side who have spoken in favor of Mr. VARE and who voted against the seating of Mr. NYE.

Mr. EDGE, of New Jersey, voted to close the door in Mr. NYE's face.

Mr. FESS, of Ohio, who has spoken so eloquently this morning, voted to exclude Mr. NYE.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, who has spoken against this Republican resolution, voted against the seating of Mr. NYE.

Mr. MCLEAN, of Connecticut, who yesterday pleaded eloquently for the immediate admission of Mr. VARE, voted for the permanent exclusion of Mr. NYE.

The distinguished Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] also voted against Mr. NYE's admission to the Senate.

In brief, everyone who has spoken against this resolution and in favor of letting Mr. VARE enter the Senate voted to keep Mr. NYE out of the Senate on a hair-splitting constitutional technicality. We entreat those who urge the seating of Mr. VARE to explain the consistency of arguing that the Constitution is their bulwark when they stand upon a technical question of law, but affords us no protection when we stand upon a notorious question of fact.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senators to whom the Senator refers had had their way in the Nye case, how long would the State of North Dakota have been denied its equal representation in this body, under the theory they now advance?

Mr. NEELY. Until the next general election or more than 10 months from the day on which Mr. NYE's case was decided by the Senate. The eloquent Senator from Arkansas of course understands that Mr. NYE's vote was not needed on the other side to organize the Senate then, as Mr. VARE's vote is needed to organize it now, and that there was accordingly no occasion for haste in the former case.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will not the Senator put into the RECORD as a part of his remarks the entire vote on the Nye case?

Mr. NEELY. Yes. I shall be glad to do so, and now ask unanimous consent to insert it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will not the Senator read it now?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly. The record of the vote appears on page 1893 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the 12th day of January, 1926.

The following are those who voted to seat Mr. NYE:

Ashurst, Borah, Bratton, Brookhart, Broussard, Capper, Copeland, Couzens, Dill, Ferris, Frazier, Harreld, Harris, Harrison, Heflin, Howell, Johnson, Kendrick, La Follette, McKellar, McMaster, McNary, Mayfield, Neely, Norris, Overman, Ransdell, Reed of Missouri, Robinson of Arkansas, Schall, Sheppard, Shipstead, Simmons, Smith, Stanfield, Stephens, Swanson, Trammell, Tyson, Underwood, Wheeler.

Those voting against seating Mr. NYE are the following:

Bayard, Bingham, Blease, Bruce, Butler, Caraway, Curtis, Dale, Deneen, Edge, Ernst, Fess, George, Gerry, Gillett, Glass, Goff, Gooding, Hale, Jones of Washington, Keyes, Lenroot, McLean, Means, Metcalf, Moses, Oddie, Pepper, Pine, Reed of Pennsylvania, Robinson of Indiana, Sackett, Shortridge, Wadsworth, Walsh, Warren, Watson, Williams, Willis.

Mr. President, let me now very briefly call attention to two or three paragraphs contained in the ingenious argument of the always resourceful Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question before he proceeds. Was the objection to Mr. NYE taking his seat at that time based upon the fact that he was not 30 years of age?

Mr. NEELY. It was not.

Mr. SIMMONS. That he was not a resident of the State of North Dakota?

Mr. NEELY. It was not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or not a citizen of the United States for nine years?

Mr. NEELY. It was not. Such objections were never even suggested.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Was not the question of the validity of his certificate raised because of the thought that the Legislature of North Dakota had never empowered the governor to make such an appointment? The legislature had not acted since the adoption of the seventeeth amendment to the Constitution. That was the precise question, was it not?

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has correctly stated the question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was the validity of the certificate.

Mr. NEELY. Which was perfectly regular in every respect.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the reason why the certificate was held not to be good was that the seventeenth amendment provided that the legislature of any State could empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments, and the Legislature of North Dakota had not in fact done so.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator's statement involves an error. The certificate was held to be good and Mr. NYE was permitted to take his seat.

Mr. President, let us return to the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania in behalf of Mr. VARE. It is the most plausible speech that has been made in Mr. VARE's favor. It is a masterpiece, considering the poor material upon which the discussion is based.

But the Senator has not been as logical as he usually is. After declaring that about $650,000 appears to be the aggregate of all the expenditures made by Mr. VARE and those associated with him, the Senator inquires, "While Mr. VARE was doing this"—that is, while he and his associates were buying up watchers at $10 apiece under the law of Pennsylvania and investing hundreds of thousands of dollars in the elevating enterprise—"while Mr. VARE was doing that what were the others doing? Mr. Pinchot, whose candidacy was coupled with no one else's, spent for his own particular private benefit in that campaign $187,000."

What do Mr. Pinchot's expenditures have to do with this case? Are we to acquit one man of rascality, corruption, and fraud in the State of Pennsylvania because some other person in that State may have done something of which we do not approve?

Again, the Senator from Pennsylvania says that it is impossible to allocate the expenditures of the vast sum of more than $800,000 in the State of Pennsylvania for the Vare cause, for the reason that there were many running with him. Because we can not convict all of the conspirators, must we set all of them free and reward the author of the conspiracy with a seat in the Senate?

The papers of the country without regard to politics have denounced this disgraceful political debauch in the State of Pennsylvania in no uncertain terms. The Literary Digest for the 26th of June, 1926, spoke to the point as follows:

From coast to coast the editorial pages of the daily press are ringing with shocked and indignant protests against the part played by money in Pennsylvania's politics. "Enough evidence that the Pennsylvania senatorial nomination was an auction has been produced to warrant the Senate in refusing to seat the nominee if elected," declares Senator CAPPER'S Topeka Capital (Republican), which believes it "impossible for the Senate or the country to remain indifferent and acquiescent to the calm story of the political debauchery of the second State in the Union." "If America can read the evidence thus far given without a shudder and a surge of indignation, it is because we are in a condition of disgusting demoralization and lacking in an ordinary sense of civic decency," avers the New York Evening World (Democratic). What chance has popular opinion to reveal itself in the dazzling glare of so much gold, wonders the Wichita Beacon (Independent Republican).

"Newberry, whose primary election expenditures shocked the country only a few years ago, was but a small potato. But who would be rash enough to predict that the lavish use of money in the Vare-Pepper-Pinchot campaign will shock Pennsylvania, or that the voters here will set the seal of their disapproval upon the investment of fabulous sums by politicians to advance their own interests at the polling places?"

The outstanding facts revealed by the candidates and their managers under the cross-questioning of Senator REED's committee are that the unsuccessful campaigns of Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot cost, respectively, $1,620,000 and $195,102, while the nomination of Representative WILLIAM S. VARE cost $604,905. It is claimed that these sums were spent legitimately for propaganda, advertising, etc. Thus one witness was certain that "all the money spent by the Pepper-Fisher ticket was as legitimately used as money given to a church"; and one of Mr. VARE's managers declared: "I never heard of a vote being bought in Pennsylvania." But the statement of one of Governor Pinchot's lieutenants that the Vare and Pepper forces spent $494,900 in Pittsburgh for "watchers" at $10 a day draws the fire of Democratic editors. The employment of these 49,490 "watchers," insists the New York Evening World (Democrat), can only be interpreted as "a purchase of votes."

So it was, Mr. President, and I for one intend to vote against awarding to Mr. VARE or any other man a seat in the Senate obtained by bargain and sale. I intend to vote, during my continuance in this body, against the seating of any man who has notoriously debauched the voters of a State in order to procure an election. If we fail to close and fasten the door of the Senate against every man who comes here with a certificate which is based upon a purchased election we shall thereby blast the hopes, the ambitions, and the aspirations of every poor man and woman and child in the United States. God forbid that the Senate shall ever be guilty of committing such a crime.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ferris	La Follette	Schall
Barkley	Fess	McKellar	Sheppard
Bayard	Fletcher	McLean	Shipstead
Bingham	Frazier	McMaster	Shortridge
Black	Gerry	McNary	Simmons
Blaine	Gillett	Mayfield	Smith
Blease	Glass	Metcalf	Smoot
Borah	Goff	Moses	Steck
Bratton	Gould	Neely	Steiwer
Brookhart	Greene	Norbeck	Stephens
Broussard	Hale	Nye	Swanson
Bruce	Harris	Oddie	Thomas
Capper	Harrison	Overman	Trammell
Caraway	Hawes	Phipps	Tydings
Copeland	Hayden	Pine	Tyson
Couzens	Heflin	Pittman	Wagner
Curtis	Howell	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Dale	Johnson	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Deneen	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Watson
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Edwards	King	Sackett	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask that the question may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] for the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] as amended. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "resolution," on page 1, and to insert the following:

Whereas WILLIAM S. VARE, from the State of Pennsylvania, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Senator from said State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of a complete investigation thereof, the said WILLIAM S. VARE is entitled to be sworn in as a Senator upon his prima facie case.

Resolved further, That when sworn in his credentials and all the papers in relation to his right to retain his seat be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to report thereon at the earliest practicable moment, and not in any case later than February 8, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. If present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON (when the name of Mr. JONES of New Mexico was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES of New Mexico] is ill and absent from the Chamber on that account. He is paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING]. If the Senator from New Mexico were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I am paired upon this question with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. HOWELL (when the name of Mr. NORRIS was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when the name of Mr. WALSH of Montana was called). My colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] is detained on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOODING] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who is absent on account of illness, if present would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—31

Bingham	Gillett	Moses	Smith
Blease	Goff	Oddie	Smoot
Borah	Gould	Pine	Steck

NOT VOTING—8

du Pont	Gooding	King	Phipps
George	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Walsh, Mont.

So the amendment of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk as a substitute, and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "resolution" on page 1, and to insert in lieu thereof:

Whereas WILLIAM S. VARE, from the State of Pennsylvania, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Senator from said State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of a complete investigation thereof, the said WILLIAM S. VARE is entitled to be sworn in as a Senator upon his prima facie case; and

Resolved further, That when sworn in his credentials and all the papers in relation to his right to retain his seat be referred to the special committee of the Senate created by Senate Resolution 195, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, adopted May 17, 1926, to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate, and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election; and

Resolved further, That said special committee be directed to report its evidence and findings to the Senate within 60 days, if practicable, and that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to report to the Senate within 60 days its findings in the election contest by William B. Wilson against the said WILLIAM S. VARE, heretofore referred by the Senate to said Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may be mistaken, but I have understood that the Senator from Pennsylvania has contended that that special committee is no longer in existence.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President; I have not so contended since the passage of the resolution in the Frank L. Smith case, which impliedly revived it.

I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I make the point of order against all of the resolution preceding the reference to the special committee for the reason that it is in substance identical with the substitute resolution on which we have just voted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate I do not think a Senator is entitled to offer more than one substitute. I am not going to raise the point of order, however, and I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not press his point of order.

Mr. NEELY. If that is the way my leader feels about it, I withdraw it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think we should have the privilege of voting on the resolution as it has been offered, notwithstanding the fact that I think it would be subject to a point of order, for the reason that one substitute having already been submitted it is not in order to offer another substitute; but I do not make the point of order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON (when the name of Mr. JONES of New Mexico was called). I make the same announcement that I made on the previous roll call with respect to the illness of my colleague [Mr. JONES of New Mexico], his absence, and how he would vote if present.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOWELL (when Mr. NORRIS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. NORRIS] is detained by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when the name of Mr. WALSH of Montana was called). My colleague [Mr. WALSH of Montana] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—31

So the amendment of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. REED of Pennsylvania called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

So Senate Resolution 2 as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate, and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election; and

Whereas said committee, in the discharge of its duties, notified WILLIAM S. VARE, of Pennsylvania, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceeding, and the said WILLIAM S. VARE appeared in person and by attorney before said committee while it was engaged in making such investigation; and

Whereas the said committee has reported the evidence which without substantial dispute shows that at the primary election at which the said WILLIAM S. VARE is alleged to have been nominated as a candidate for the United States Senate there were numerous and various instances of fraud and corruption in behalf of the candidacy of the said WILLIAM S. VARE, and that there was spent in behalf of the said WILLIAM S. VARE in said primary election, by the said WILLIAM S. VARE and his friends, a sum of money exceeding $785,000; and

Whereas the said WILLIAM S. VARE has in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity was given him, not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas the said official report of said committee and the sworn evidence taken by said committee is now and for many months has been on file in the Senate, and all of the said facts appear without substantial dispute; and

Whereas on the 10th day of January, 1927, there was filed in the Senate an official communication from the then Governor of Pennsylvania, made and delivered to the Senate in pursuance of law, the following certificate:

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Harrisburg, January 8, 1927.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the returns of the election of United States Senator, held on November 2, 1926, as the law of this Commonwealth directs.

I have the honor also to inform you that I have to-day signed and by registered mail delivered to Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE a certificate, which is as follows:

"To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"This is to certify that on the face of the returns filed in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth of the election held on the 2d day of November, 1926, WILLIAM S. VARE appears to have been chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1927."

The form of words customarily used for such certificates by the governors of this Commonwealth and the form recommended by the Senate of the United States both include certification that the candidate in question has been "duly chosen by the qualified electors" of the Commonwealth.

I can not so certify, because I do not believe that Mr. VARE has been duly chosen. On the contrary, I am convinced, and have repeatedly declared, that his nomination was partly bought and partly stolen, and that frauds committed in his interest have tainted both the primary and the general election. But even if there had been no fraud in the election, a man who was not honestly nominated can not be honestly entitled to a seat.

The stealing of votes for Mr. VARE, and the amount and the sources of the money spent in his behalf, make it clear to me that the election returns do not in fact correctly represent the will of the sovereign voters of Pennsylvania.

Therefore, I have so worded the certificate required by law that I can sign it without distorting the truth.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Very respectfully yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT, Governor.

Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the expenditure of such a large sum of money to secure the nomination of the said WILLIAM S. VARE as a candidate for the United States Senate prima facie is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, and, together with the charges of corruption and fraud made in the report of said committee, and substantiated by the evidence taken by said committee, and the charges of corruption and fraud officially made by the Governor of Pennsylvania, prima facie taints with fraud and corruption the credentials of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That the claim of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said WILLIAM S. VARE and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate within 60 days if practicable; and that until the coming in of the report of said committee and until the final action of the Senate thereon the said WILLIAM S. VARE be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate: Provided, That the said WILLIAM S. VARE shall be accorded the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of being heard touching his right to receive the oath of office and to membership in the Senate.

The preamble as modified was agreed to.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, in my remarks a day or two ago I made a statement concerning the judge who had passed on the application for ballots. I find that I was in error. The case was heard by Judge Thompson. The error arose from the fact that I had been informed it was to go to Judge Kirkpatrick, and I believe it was at one time so assigned that it would have gone to him. My information was to that effect. I gladly make this statement of correction. I would have made it yesterday, but overlooked it.

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN PROPAGANDA

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the highest possible privilege. It has nothing whatever to do with the matter just adjudicated by the Senate.

In to-day's issue of the Washington Herald occurs this headline:

One million two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars ordered paid four Senators by Mexico.

In the same newspaper appears what purports to be a photographic copy of a letter authorizing the payment of $1,200,000 to three persons whose names are marked out from the photograph, but who are represented to be United States Senators. Underneath that photograph occur these words in English:

Here is an order of treasurer general of Mexico authorizing chief clerk of the controller's department to forward $1,200,000 to nigh personages in United States. In this facsimile, the original of which is in the possession of the Hearst newspapers, the names of the three alleged beneficiaries are deleted. Their names and the amount ordered paid to them remain in the original document.

A translation of this photograph likewise is printed in the same newspaper, and the letter there in translation reads as follows:

TO THE CHIEF CLERK OF THE CONTROLLER'S DEPARTMENT:

By direction of the Citizen President of the Republic you will please order the passage of expediente No. 14396, corresponding to authorization No. 3481, issued by the Presidency of the Republic in favor of the citizen, Arturo M. Elias, financial agent of Mexico in New York, for the sum of $1,200,000 (one million two hundred thousand dollars), to be charged to secret expenditures for pro-Mexican propaganda, to be paid in the following form:

To Mr. ———, $350,000.
To Mr. ———, $500,000.
To Mr. ———, $350,000.

The total of which our said financial agent has duly delivered (or will deliver) without exacting the corresponding receipts, given the honorability and high personality of the recipients.

It is therefore ordered by superior authority that this expediente pass the auditing department without the corresponding requisites of law.

EFFECTIVE SUFFRAGE NO REELECTION.

L. MONTES DE OCA,
The Comptroller General.

MEXICO, D. F., July 15, 1926.

Then there is a note seeming to indicate apparently the initials of the stenographer, and underneath that translation appears in parentheses the following:

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—The names deleted from the foregoing text are those of United States Senators.)

On the second page of the same newspaper appear other photographs, and one of them, of which I do not find the translation, is apparently a report of expenditures made, and shows the expenditure of $1,200,000 as having been made on August 4, 1926, to three persons whose names are similarly deleted in the photograph, but underneath the photograph are these words, evidently written in by some one on the newspaper:

This is a facsimile of an actual ledger sheets from the Mexican treasury department records, showing the transfer of $1,200,000 to Elias, the financial agent in New York. The names of the men purported to be beneficiaries (deleted above) are those of United States Senators.

I will not stop to read the other translations and letters, but they appear at first sight to confirm the inference deducible from the letters I have already read.

Mr. President, as long as that story appears in print untested, uninvestigated, undenied, the honor of every Member of this body is at stake. A cloud is cast upon the integrity of every man who sits as a Member of the United States Senate, and as a matter of the highest privilege, not only personally to myself but to every other Member of the Senate, I offer the following resolution and ask that it be read, and I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 7), as follows:

Whereas the Washington Herald, a newspaper published in Washington, D. C., in its issue of December 9, 1927, publishes photographic copy of a letter purporting to evidence the payment of large sums of money to three Senators of the United States, by the Government of the Republic of Mexico, for the purpose of influencing their official action, and publishes also a purported translation of said letter, as follows:

TO THE CHIEF CLERK OF THE CONTROLLER'S DEPARTMENT:

By direction of the Citizen President of the Republic you will please order the passage of expediente No. 14396, corresponding to authorization No. 3481, issued by the Presidency of the Republic in favor of the citizen, Arturo M. Elias, financial agent of Mexico in New York, for the sum of $1,200,000, to be charged to secret expenditures for pro-Mexican propaganda, to be paid in the following form:

To Mr. ———, $350,000.
To Mr. ———, $500,000.
To Mr. ———, $350,000.

The total of which our said financial agent has duly delivered (or will deliver) without exacting the corresponding receipts, given the honorability and high personality of the recipients.

It is therefore ordered by superior authority that this expediente pass the auditing department without the corresponding requisites of law.

EFFECTIVE SUFFRAGE NO REELECTION.

L. MONTES DE OCA,
The Comptroller General.

MEXICO, D. F., July 15, 1926.

DR-LMdeO.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The names deleted from the foregoing text are those of United States Senators.)

Now therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators shall be forthwith appointed by the President of the Senate; and the said committee is hereby authorized and instructed immediately to investigate what moneys, rewards, or things of value have been given, promised, or offered to any Senator or Senators of the United States by any government or official of any foreign power for the purpose of propaganda or the purpose of influencing the official act of such Senator or Senators.

Said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time or times and at such place or places as it may deem necessary; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents, and to do such other acts as may be necessary in the matter of said investigation.

The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee willfully makes default or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Said committee shall promptly report to the Senate the facts by it ascertained.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In order to avoid any possible question as to a point of order, I think it would be wise if I were to perfect the resolution by striking out the authorization for expenditures. That can be taken care of later by another resolution. I will strike out the authorization for the payment of expenses out of the contingent fund.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether there is any reason given in The Herald for the deletion of the names of the Senators?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No reason is suggested in that part of the article which I have read in the short time I have been able to devote to it.

Mr. GLASS. Why modify the resolution? Why does the Senator assume that any Senator would raise the point of order?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is a matter of statute, as I am informed. I do not want to expose it to any possible invalidity because of conflict with the general statute providing for its reference to a committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate can later authorize the expenditure of the necessary funds.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We can do it this afternoon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We can do it this afternoon after we get the appointment of a committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator state the date when the alleged payments were made?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The date of the ledger entry appears to be August 4, 1926. I see no evidence in the paper, so far as I have read it, of any payment, but only the assertion of some agent that he has made it. That is one of the matters which it seems to me ought to be investigated without the loss of a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as the committee the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. REED; the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON; the Senator from Washington, Mr. JONES; the Senator from Maryland, Mr. BRUCE; and the Senator from California, Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate reading of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 8) as follows:

Resolved, That the special Senate committee created pursuant to Resolution 7 agreed to this day is authorized to employ stenographic assistance, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings and proceedings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee and such clerical or other assistance as may be deemed necessary by the committee, that all expenses incurred, including costs of travel by the committee or their assistants, in furtherance of the purposes of said resolution, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers properly approved. The cost of this investigation shall not exceed $25,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. KEYES subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to submit a report at this time on the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEYES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution No. 8 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course it will be understood that the provision in regard to the cost of stenographic reporting work will be the same as is customarily made?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is all in the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. If that provision is in the resolution, I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 9), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That paragraph 1 of Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

1. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of 17 Senators.

Committee on Appropriations, to consist of 19 Senators.

Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of five Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

Committee on Banking and Currency, to consist of 15 Senators.

Committee on Civil Service, to consist of 11 Senators.

INVESTIGATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and to have it immediately considered. I think it will lead to no debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 10), as follows:

Resolved, That a resolution of the United States Senate, agreed to on May 19, 1926, numbered Senate Resolution 195, of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, creating a special committee to investigate expenditures in senatorial primary and general elections, and all subsequent resolutions dealing with the said special committee and agreed to by the United States Senate during the Sixty-ninth Congress (to wit, S. Res. 227, S. Res. 258, and S. Res. 324), have continued in full force and operation since the dates of their respective enactment by the Senate, and do now, as then, express the will of this body.

And that the said special committee appointed pursuant to said Senate Resolution 195 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, shall continue to execute the directions of the said several resolutions relating to the said committee until the Senate accepts or rejects the final report of the said special committee or otherwise orders.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have not had a chance to see it. Will the Senator let it go over under the rule and call it up later?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I could, but the Senate is here and acting on these matters. I will tell the Senator what it is. It simply reaffirms the powers of the committee and continues them without in any manner enlarging them.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator permit me five minutes to look at the resolution?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; I will withhold it.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently said: Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his resolution?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Senators are examining it. I think they will grant consent to have it considered at this time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am very glad to offer no opposition to a resolution which will revive the special committee headed by my friend from Missouri and give it all the authority that it had during the last session, but the resolution which he has presented recites as a matter of history that the committee has continued in full force since the adoption of the original resolution. To that I can not subscribe, because I do not believe it is so. To the remainder of it, however, I have no disagreement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator give his consent for its present consideration?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. So long as the provision to which I have referred remains in it——

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will not take one line out of it unless the Senate takes it out.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. The responsibility, then, for the loss of three days of time again rests upon the Senator from Pennsylvania. The Senate is here; the resolution is simple and plain; it requires no debate; every Senator will understand it when he hears it read; and if the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to lose three days more after having insisted on the proceedings being shortened and early reports being made he can take the responsibility.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parlimentary inquiry. Is it now in order to introduce bills?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills can not be introduced except by unanimous consent until the next morning hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that all Senators be authorized to introduce bills at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that all public bills may be introduced at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Resolved, That paragraph 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, to wit:

2. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated shall be kept secret, but hereafter all votes upon any nomination shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD whenever the Senate by a majority vote shall so order. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret. This rule shall not apply to a Senator making public his own vote.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. MOSES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 12), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 13), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during and sessions or recesses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 14), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

FLOOD STORAGE RESERVOIR, UPPER MISSOURI RIVER

Mr. FRAZIER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 15), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas whatever may be the ultimate decision of Congress as to the plans which will be adopted for flood control and utilization of the waters of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and ramifications, it is evident that from the many plans that have been and will be advanced for consideration, much time will be consumed before any ultimate decision covering the entire subject can be arrived at; and

Whereas in the Riker Spillway project for control and utilization of the waters of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and ramifications, or in any other practicable plan which may be formulated for that purpose, the control of the floods which annually proceed from the headwaters of the Missouri River is an essential factor; and

Whereas in considering the value of this essential factor in flood control from this source to the Gulf, it becomes essential that Congress at this time ascertain from the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which has been called in special session for January 10, 1927, if that State will provide the land and premises which would be necessary and used in connection therewith, excepting Indian lands and lands owned by the United States; and

Whereas to that end it is essential that a dam be constructed across the Missouri River at a point about 80 miles northwest of Bismarck, N. Dak., which will provide a storage reservoir by the backing up of the waters of this river for about 130 miles and have a capacity of about one thousand billion cubic feet, and which would be amply sufficient to control floods equivalent to any which has ever passed that point.

Such a restraint of these flood waters, and their liberation uniformly when desired, would prevent such flood waters meeting the flood waters of the Mississippi in the future as they have in the past, and prevent the ravages that have been caused by this annual spring flood in the Missouri River below Montana, and where practicable by similar control of floods in most of its lower tributaries would permit the Missouri River to be made navigable from the Missouri to the Montana line because of the lesser inclination of the uniform flow of these waters to form bars and cause snags in the river: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it shall be ascertained, from the State of North Dakota, if the State of North Dakota will provide the lands and premises, excepting public domain, lands belonging to the United States, and Indian lands, which will be utilized, covered, submerged, inundated, and necessary for the construction and maintenance of a dam about 200 feet high on the Missouri River, in the State of North Dakota, at a point about 80 miles northwest of the city of Bismarck.

FLOOD CONTROL OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

Mr. HAWES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 16), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that a defined national policy be established for the protection of life and property from floods of the Mississippi River and its tributaries and for the improvement of navigation, and that such policy should be—

First. That it is the duty of the Federal Government to assume entire charge and direction of flood control upon and along the Mississippi River and its tributaries;

Second. That flood control and improvement of navigation upon and along the Mississippi River and its tributaries shall be treated as connected and correlated subjects; and Third. That the entire cost of flood control and improvement of navigation upon and along the Mississippi River and its tributaries shall be borne by the Federal Government.

ACTS ADMINISTERED BY INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Mr. HAWES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 17), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby requested to prepare as soon as is practicable a manuscript, in form suitable to be printed, covering the text of those provisions of law which (1) are administered by the commission; (2) affect the commission's work, powers, or duties; and (3) the commission decides should be included so as to make available a comprehensive publication of the Federal laws relating to the regulation of carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, suitably annotated, as the commission deems to be of public interest and value, with digests following each section or paragraph of pertinent decisions of the Federal courts and the commission, together with an index, the text of general rules and regulations, or appropriate reference thereto, promulgated by the commission under authority of any of said provisions of law, and such tables as may be necessary, and to transmit such manuscript to the Secretary of the Senate upon the completion thereof. Such manuscript, when received, is authorized to be printed as transmitted as a Senate document, and shall be in lieu of the manuscript requested by Senate Resolution 334, Sixty-ninth Congress, agreed to January 28, 1927.

CATHERINE HARDESTY

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 18), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Catherine Hardesty, widow of Martin T. Hardesty, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 19), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 20), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 21), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Whereas the Federal reserve act of December 23, 1913, which established the Federal reserve system, has for its principal purpose the concentration of the banking reserves of the country; and

Whereas the complete concentration of banking reserves may only be accomplished by bringing the State as well as the national banks into correlation with the Federal reserve system; and

Whereas a large proportion of the State banks have never entered the Federal reserve system and a considerable number of national banks have surrendered their charters and have been converted into State banks; and

Whereas such converted banks frequently leave the Federal reserve system at the time of their conversion, and otherwise are free to leave the Federal reserve system at any time if they so elect; and

Whereas it is claimed that banks incorporated under the banking laws of the several States are vested with corporate privileges, and exercise a latitude of discretion in their operations, which are denied to national banking associations, particularly with respect to the currency and funds available for reserves, loans upon security of real property, the exercise of certain fiduciary powers, the maintenance of branch banking offices, the acceptance of time and savings deposits; and are otherwise not subject to the same necessary restrictions as are national banking associations; and

Whereas during the past two years there have been an unprecedented number of failures of both national and State banks, the underlying causes of which have not been ascertained and the proper means for the prevention of which have not been determined; and

Whereas there is believed to be a lack of proper coordination in the examination of national and State banks in order that examinations shall be thorough and frequent, yet without unnecessary duplication; and

Whereas a conflicting competition is developing between national and State banks, the course of which will have an important effect upon the future of the Federal reserve system and of the national banking associations: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to study the relative increase in the number of State banks as contrasted with national banking association; the rights and privileges vested in State banks which are not granted, but which may be safely granted, to national banking associations; the restrictions and safeguards now imposed upon State banks which may with safety be imposed upon national banking associations; the failures of State banks and national banking associations since the enactment of the Federal reserve act, the causes thereof, and the proper means for the prevention of such failures; the character of official supervision exercised over State banks and national banking associations; the policy and economic effects of branch banking and of so-called chain banking or holding-company banking, by which an individual or a group of individual bankers or of banking or other corporations exercise a controlling interest in a number of banks; the causes, extent, and effects of bank mergers and bank consolidation; the relation between investment banking and commercial banking by State banks and national banking associations; the present status of savings deposits and the best means for protecting them; the policies of the Federal Reserve Board and their effect upon State banks and national banking associations; the general operation of the Federal reserve system, both at home and in relation to foreign central banks; whether so-called "war amendments" to the Federal reserve act ought now to be repealed; whether the Federal reserve act should be amended with respect to the composition of the Federal Reserve Board or with respect to the appointment of directors of Federal reserve banks; and to make and report findings and recommendations in the premises to the Senate.

The committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ necessary clerical assistance, to sit during the session or during any recess of the Senate, and at such places as it may deem advisable. Any subcommittee duly authorized thereto may exercise the powers conferred upon the committee by this resolution.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 22), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That wherever the rule of the Senate permits a single objection to defeat action on any matter presented, the rule be changed to require every such objection to be seconded by two Members, thus requiring three objections instead of one as is the rule at present.

ROSE E. MILLARD

Mr. ODDIE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 23), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Rose E. Millard, widow of Homer B. Millard, late a private of the Capitol police, under the direction of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and other allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING

Mr. ODDIE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 24), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

ELEVATION OF BATTLESHIP GUNS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 25), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Whereas it has been stated on the floor of the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that "a protest has been made by another power to this country against elevating the guns of our battleships, and until that protest has been settled I do not believe we should take affirmative action and vote to appropriate for the elevation of guns"; and

Whereas it is admitted by all competent naval authorities, as well as by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, that the American Navy can not attain or maintain the 5–5–3 ratio accorded to it under the limitation-of-arms agreement without elevating the guns on these 13 battleships; and

Whereas it has been reported by the Secretary of State that there is no legal reason under the disarmament conference agreement of 1922 why our guns should not be elevated; and

Whereas it has been asserted that the protest against our elevating guns on these 13 battleships was made to this country on April 15, 1923, nearly two years ago; and

Whereas Article II of the limitation of armament treaty provides in part that: "The British Empire may, in accordance with the replacement table in Chapter II, part 3, construct two new capital ships not exceeding 35,000 tons (35,560 metric tons), standard displacement each"; and

Whereas in Article VII of said treaty it is provided: "The total tonnage for aircraft carriers of each of the contracting powers shall not exceed in standard displacement, for the United States 135,000 tons (137,160 metric tons); for the British Empire 135,000 tons (137,160 metric tons)"; and

Whereas Article IX of the treaty is as follows:

"No aircraft carrier exceeding 27,000 tons (27,432 metric tons) standard displacement shall be acquired by, or constructed by, for, or within the jurisdiction of, any of the contracting powers.

"However, any of the contracting powers may, provided that its total tonnage allowance of aircraft carriers is not thereby exceeded, build not more than two aircraft carriers, each of a tonnage of not more than 33,000 tons (33,528 metric tons) standard displacement, and in order to effect economy any of the contracting powers may use for this purpose any two of their ships, whether constructed or in course of construction, which would otherwise be scrapped under the provisions of Article II. The armament of any aircraft carriers exceeding 27,000 tons (27,432 metric tons) standard displacement shall be in accordance with the requirements of Article X, except that the total number of guns to be carried in case any of such guns be of a caliber exceeding 6 inches (152 millimeters), except antiaircraft guns and guns not exceeding 5 inches (127 millimeters), shall not exceed 8"; and

Whereas Article X of the treaty provides in part as follows: "No aircraft carrier of any of the contracting powers shall carry a gun with a caliber in excess of 8 inches (203 millimeters)"; and

Whereas it has been stated on the floor of the Senate and in the public print that the new British ships called the Nelson and Rodney are vessels supposed to be the latest thing in battleships; that they will carry nine 16-inch guns, and that these guns will be placed forward, and that the after deck will be used for an airplane platform upon which they can carry airships, and that there will be no stacks: Now therefore be it

Resolved, First. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken by the executive department to have said protest against the elevation of guns on 13 of our battleships settled and determined; whether any suggestion has been made by the protesting nation or by the United States that the matter be submitted for arbitration; and at what time a decision in reference to the protest may be expected.

Second. That the President of the United States is hereby further respectfully requested to obtain the information from Great Britain as provided under the terms of said treaty and inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether said ships, Nelson and Rodney, conform to the provisions of said treaty; whether the same are battleships or aircraft carriers; if combined battleships and aircraft carriers, whether or not such ships, as aircraft carriers, do not violate Article X of the treaty by carrying guns in excess of the caliber therein permitted; whether the said ships, as aircraft carriers, do not violate Section IX of the treaty in reference to tonnage and in reference to the number of guns carried.

STRENGTH OF NATIONAL GUARD—ALLOTMENT AND COST

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 26), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate at as early date as may be practicable the following information:

First. The total number of the National Guard and how divided in the various military branches—namely, how many in the Infantry, Cavalry, Air Service, and other services.

Second. How the National Guard troops are allotted with respect to States—namely, the number of National Guard soldiers, enlisted men and officers, in each State.

Third. What States are maintaining their allotments in whole or in part.

Fourth. The several amounts of money expended in each State for its National Guard.

Fifth. How many air squadrons in the National Guard and where located, and the numerical strength of each, officers and men.

Sixth. The total amount of money authorized by law for the National Guard during the year closing June 30, 1921, and the total amount spent during that year.

Seventh. The total amount of money spent for the Air Service in the National Guard for the year ending June 30, 1925, and the amount contemplated for the National Guard Air Service during the present fiscal year.

INVESTIGATION OF TAX REFUNDS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 27), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice President to investigate the subject of tax refunds involving claims for taxes of $50,000 or over. For the purpose of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit during the recess of the Congress, to employ such clerical, stenographic, or other assistance as may be necessary, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such documents and papers as it deems fit, to administer oaths, to take testimony of witnesses, and to make its report to the next session of the Senate in December, 1928. The expenses of such committee shall not exceed $10,000 and shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COURT-MARTIAL OF COL. WILLIAM MITCHELL

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 28), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate a full and complete transcript of the proceedings of the general court-martial convened under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 248, paragraph 17, dated October 20, 1925, for the trial of Col. William Mitchell, Air Service, United States Army, and that the proceedings of this court-martial be indexed and printed as a Senate document.

PROPOSED LOANS TO THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 29), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, First. That the United States Debt Funding Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and to report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable whether there has been made or is being made any agreement, express or implied, between any United States bank, banking corporation, partnership, or individual, with the Government of France, or its agents or representatives, touching a loan or loans to be made by such bank, corporations, or firms, or individuals, to the French Government or anyone representing the French Government, which loans are directly or indirectly dependent upon the ratification of the debt settlement with France heretofore tentatively arrived at by the United States Debt Funding Commission.

Second. If there is any such agreement or understanding for a loan or loans, the said commission is directed to ascertain the amount thereof, the terms thereof, the persons or corporations negotiating the same, the amount of interest, discount, commissions, or charges therefor, and all other pertinent facts connected therewith.

Third. The commission is further directed to ascertain and report if any such loan is found to be contemplated or contracted for, then whether or not any prior loan made by such bank, corporation, or firm, or individual, to the French Government or anyone representing the French Government, or any previously existing indebtedness, is included or covered by the contemplated loan, or if such loan is entirely new money to be lent such government or its agents, and for what purposes such new money is to be loaned.

ELIGIBILITY OF MEMBERS OF THE SENATE

Mr. BLEASE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 30), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be requested to inform the Senate whether or not a candidate who announces himself as opposed to the Constitution of the United States, or any section thereof, and is in favor of the nonenforcement of a law passed to carry into effect a section of the Constitution is eligible to a seat and qualified to be sworn in as a Member of the United States Senate.

DISPENSATION OF LIQUORS BY FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BLEASE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 31), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Seymour Lowman, who is in charge of the enforcement of the Volstead Act, be requested to investigate immediately and inform the Senate whether or not whisky, wine, or beer has been served by any of the foreign ambassadors, ministers, consuls, or other agents of any other countries in Washington, D. C., since the passage of the Volstead Act, and if it is now being done; and if so, with the approval of the President of the United States or any other official whose duty it is to enforce the said law; and further, if it is true that the recent representatives of the Italian delegation to this country in reference to the settlement of its debt to the United States were permitted to bring into this country champagne, whisky, and beer, or either of them; and if so, by whose permission, and if they did, why were they not promptly arrested as American citizens would have been?

Second. That a similar request be made of Hon. James M. Doran, Commissioner of Prohibition.

Third. That a similar request be made of the Secretary of the Treasury.

AMENDMENT OF RULE XXXVI

Mr. BLEASE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 32), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That paragraph 4 of Rule XXXVI of the standing rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following proviso at the end thereof:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any Senator from stating, when asked to do so by his constituents, or any one of them, how he voted on the confirmation of the nomination of any person or persons."

REVISION OF RULES

Mr. BLEASE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 33), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas there exists much difference of opinion as to the proper construction to be placed upon the various rules of the United States Senate; and

Whereas there are rules in the Senate which seemingly contradict others, causing much confusion in their construction; and

Whereas it is becoming too common a practice in the Senate to appeal from the decision of the Presiding Officer, thus leaving to a majority of the Senate the right, if they see fit, to impose their construction of the rules upon the minority: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be authorized and requested and do appoint five Members of the Senate who shall be instructed not to change, alter, or amend any present rule of the Senate, but to rewrite and present to the Senate a draft of the present rules, omitting any duplication of same, or any seeming contradiction thereof, and that they submit such draft to the Senate as early in this session as possible for such action as the Senate deems advisable to take thereon; be it further

Resolved, That the said committee shall act without compensation, but shall have their actual expenses paid and shall be empowered to employ a secretary and an expert parliamentarian, should they deem it necessary, who shall be paid such compensation as shall be fixed by the committee; and be it further

Resolved, That the sum of $——— is hereby appropriated for such purposes, which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the United States Senate on vouchers which shall be signed by the chairman and the secretary of the committee.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. BLEASE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 34), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Secretary of State be, and they are hereby, requested not to take any further action toward the United States entering into the League of Nations, or joining the so-called World Court, or taking any part therein, until further orders from the American people or the United States Senate.

AIR MAIL SERVICE TO SOUTH AMERICA

Mr. ODDIE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 35), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President enter into negotiations with Mexico or any Republic of Central and South America for the purpose of concluding treaties or conventions providing for (1) the establishment of air mail service with the United States, and (2) the construction of an international highway connecting the United States with such country.

Resolved further, That the Senate expresses its readiness to participate in the enactment of such legislation as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of such treaties or conventions.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it is my intention to ask for an executive session and then to resume legislative session for the purpose of adopting several resolutions expressing the regret of the Senate on account of the death of late Members of the House of Representatives. In view of that, I now ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WALTER W. MAGEE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions and ask that they be read and acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 36) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE LADISLAS LAZARO

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. LADISLAS LAZARO, a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I submit resolutions respecting the death of Representative LAZARO, and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 37) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. LADISLAS LAZARO, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE M. E. CRUMPACKER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. M. E. CRUMPACKER, a Representative from the State of Oregon.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask that they be adopted.

The resolutions (S. Res. 38) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. M. E. CRUMPACKER, late a Representative from the State of Oregon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM N. VAILE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM N. VAILE, a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask to have read and adopted.

The resolutions (S. Res. 39) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM N. VAILE, late a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representatives, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously made, until Monday, December 12, 1927, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, December 9, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou gracious God, out of the depths of our needs, out of the depths of our hopes, out of the depths of our failures we would say: Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good and His mercy endureth forever. Favored as we are by the constancy of Divine care, impress us that he alone deserves Thy mercy who does his best to conform to Thy law. May our conduct this day proceed from right convictions and from belief in the truth. To him who does what in him lies, God will not deny His grace. Bring our minds humbly to the thought that Thou art above all and over all. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EFFICIENCY OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, Admiral Magruder has called attention to a situation that exists in this Nation with respect to the expenditures of appropriations in the Navy that should demand some attention from this Congress. He has made the statement in substance that out of every $300,000,000 expended, $100,000,000 is wasted. Therefore I am sending to the Clerk's desk a resolution which I propose to introduce and which I desire to have read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Admiral Magruder has caused to be published in the Saturday Evening Post certain articles which relate to the efficiency of the United States Navy; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy has seen fit because of the publication of such articles to relieve Admiral Magruder from his position of responsibility at the Philadelphia Navy Yard; and

Whereas the precedent has been established that any officer giving out information, whether true or otherwise, will either be reprimanded, court-martialed, shelved, or dismissed from the service: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of the House a select committee of nine persons, none of whom represent districts wherein naval activities are located, and which committee is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the allegations made by Admiral Magruder; and, in addition, said inquiry shall include an investigation of the letters, expenditures, reports, receipts, or other documents in any way connected with any activity of the Navy affected by the articles written by Admiral Magruder.

For the purpose of said inquiry the committee, or any subcommittee designated by it, shall have the power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, affirmations, to take testimony, to sit during the sessions of the House or during any recess of the House, and may hold its sessions at such places as the committee may determine.

Such committee shall have the right at any time to report to the House in one or more reports the result of its inquiry, with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

The Speaker is hereby empowered to issue subpœnaes to witnesses upon the request of the chairman of said committee at any time, including any recess of the House, during the inquiry of the committee, and the Sergeant at Arms is hereby empowered and directed to serve all subpœnaes and other processes transferred to him by the said committee.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I shall drop the resolution in the basket and I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Rules, where it ought to go.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. I do not think references should be made by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair to make the reference.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I withdraw the request, and I ask unanimous consent that the articles referred to in that resolution and certain newspaper comments thereon be included in my remarks and extended in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. The other day they would not permit me to put in the Government's defense.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, here is a question coming before the American people in which a high official in the Navy says that out of every $3 expended $1 is wasted, to the extent of $100,000,000 per year. He caused to be published in the Saturday Evening Post an article which calls attention to the excess number of officers in the Navy, and I have heard the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], before our committee say on a good many occasions that we have an excess number of officers, and he expressed the wish that we had some way of disposing of them.

Mr. BUTLER rose.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not yield now. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs objects to allowing the articles to be published in the RECORD upon which this resolution is based, but I maintain that this House has a right to know that which has been published affecting the United States Navy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think we better not discuss this question at this time.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, let him have two minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not object to the gentleman having two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman having two minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am only doing my duty. Every man here is charged with following the dictates of his own conscience. It does not matter whether you gentlemen vote with me or do not vote with me, I am going to bring matters of this kind to your attention, because we alone—I mean the Members of this House—do not pay the expenses of running the Navy. The taxpayers of the United States pay for it, and if their money is being wasted as is charged by a high official on the inside, then it is the duty of this body to take the kind of steps that are necessary to protect our Treasury in the future.

I do not want to be a member of this proposed investigating committee, if it should be ordered, and I make that statement now. I do not think any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs or any Member who has naval activities in his district ought to be a member of this investigating committee. I do not care who fathers an investigation of this kind. You may take my name off the resolution if you desire. I simply want this subject brought to the attention of the American public in the proper way, and this is the only way that I know how to get proper consideration of it.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Not now. I have tried in a proper way to bring this to the attention of the Congress. Admiral Magruder has called attention to the excess navy yards and the amount of money they are wasting year after year, and it is a matter that ought to be looked into.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by publishing the statements in the RECORD over which this controversy arose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing Admiral Magruder's statement. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not believe we want to extend the privileges of the RECORD to Admiral Magruder or anybody else outside the floor of the House; and as I have taken that stand, I propose to stick to it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then I will ask unanimous consent to publish the articles that I have written relative to this subject in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing articles written by himself on this subject. Is there objection?

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman——

Mr. McCLINTIC. Let gentlemen object if they desire. It is perfectly all right with me.

Mr. DARROW. I would never object to my colleague printing statements, but we want to know what goes in.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Texas declined to allow me to publish matter the other day.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman says they are his own articles——

Mr. McCLINTIC. Let the representatives of the Navy object if they want to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. We will do what is right. I have lived here practically all my life, and I am not subject to anybody. I will do what is right.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to bring it to the attention of the public in a proper way.

Mr. BUTLER. The public will get all of this within three weeks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DARROW. I object.

SWEARING IN A MEMBER

Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia, presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5800.

The motion was agreed to;

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5800, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5800, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, after line 21, insert a new item, as follows: "To be expended under the articles in the provisions of the act of Congress (H. R. 5218, 69th Cong.) entitled 'An act to carry into effect the twelfth article of the treaty between the United States and the Shawnee Tribe of Indians, proclaimed October 14, 1868,' the sum of $463,752.49."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. Let the gentleman make such explanation as he thinks proper, and I reserve the right to reply.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee. This matter grows out of a bill passed by the House and Senate to pay these Indians, which went to the President on the last day of the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress. The bill was not vetoed or approved nor returned to Congress. The question went to the Judiciary Committee of the House upon a resolution declaring that it had become a law notwithstanding the fact that it had not been signed nor returned to the Congress. The question turned on the language in the Constitution that a bill will become a law if withheld by the President for 10 days unless the Congress by its adjournment prevents its return. The contention in the case is that the adjournment contemplated by the Constitution of the United States is the final adjournment of Congress. The adjournment of a session is not a final adjournment and does not preclude the President from returning a bill with his objection to the House, so that Congress may have an opportunity to say whether it agrees with the President or disagrees with him. For 60 years under our Government every bill was either vetoed or signed by the President of the United States. The habit has grown up in recent years, especially under Mr. Cleveland's administration in regard to pension bills, where there was what was called a pocket veto.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will.

Mr. ALMON. Did the Committee on the Judiciary make a report to the House on that resolution?

Mr. McKEOWN. They held unanimously the bill had become a law. Now as to the merits of this bill, in order that the House may understand fully the righteousness of the bill. These Shawnee Indians were once located in the State of Ohio. The United States Government made a treaty with the Shawnees by which they were transferred down into southeastern Kansas before the Civil War, and in order that they might not have trouble with the settlers it was agreed on the part of the Indians that in the event any settlers or marauders came in and took their property they should desist from retaliation, desist from making any raids on white settlers in that country, and in consideration of that the Government agreed that it would recompense them for any cattle or horses or other property lost.

They moved into that district, which then became the vortex in the struggle between slavery and antislavery in the Territory of Kansas. They suffered losses, and the United States Government, in compliance with the treaty of 1854, paid them up to that time for those losses. When the Civil War broke out in 1861 these Indians took the side of the Union. They stayed with the Union side of the conflict while the Indians south of them in the Indian Territory joined the Confederacy, and because these Indians refused to go on the side of the Confederacy and remained on the side of the Union they were made objects of raids by the Indians of the Indian Territory. They were hemmed in between Missouri and the Indian Territory, where they suffered tremendous losses at the hands of soldiers on both sides. Two hundred and eight of their warriors fought on the Union side in the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has used five minutes.

Mr. McKEOWN. May I have three minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. So the Government of the United States said at Fort Smith, in a treaty of amity with the western tribes, that in consideration of the loyalty of the Shawnee Indians it would pay them the damages suffered, and agreed with them to send to them two men picked by the Government to ascertain and pay the damages. In accordance with that, the Government sent down to that country two picked men, highly qualified to perform that duty, Jonathan Richards and Mr. Pickering, and they went down there and examined each and every claim, disallowed claims that were not justified, cut down others, and fixed the amounts as specified; and these claims are set out and itemized in every particular.

There were Senecas, mixed Senecas, and Quapaws, and the Congress of the United States, on the recommendation of the Department of the Interior, paid all the claims of the other tribes but these, and owing to the fact that these people moved into the Indian Territory, where they had no Representative in Congress, and although different Secretaries of the Interior since 1874 have recommended that these claims be paid by the United States, they have not been paid.

This is a claim due to these Indians for 50 long years, and without a cent of interest. They were loyal to the United States. The bill went through the Senate of the United States three times and through the House at a different time, and finally passed, and upon the whole the claim is simply an honest, just claim against the United States which ought to be settled.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. How many of these Indians are there now?

Mr. McKEOWN. There are not many of them, but there are a lot of their descendants left down there. The Government has a list of them.

Mr. MILLER. Approximately about how many?

Mr. McKEOWN. Two or three hundred; probably not more than that.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman tell us about what are the financial and living conditions of these Indians at the present time?

Mr. McKEOWN. These Indians are known as absentee Shawnees. They have very little property now. They are not wards of the Government in the sense that the Government must pay them anything. As shown by the records of the commissioner, they were the most prosperous tribe of Indians before the war.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is it not a fact that other tribes who had claims exactly like this were all paid by the Government?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. They were all paid.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the point of order be disposed of.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that there is no law authorizing the expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order on the ground that there is no law authorizing the payment of the claim. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes, Mr. Chairman. The matter was fully presented to the House at a former session of Congress. The Judiciary Committee found unanimously that it is an existing law. A former Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has ruled to that effect. We have an established precedent already in the House on that subject, and there are Members here who were on the Committee on the Judiciary who would like to present the matter, if desired.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma please cite to the Chair the law authorizing this expenditure?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes. The great Committee on the Judiciary of the House has passed upon that and found that it is the law, and for the guidance of the House the opinion of that Judiciary Committee certainly ought to be highly persuasive. The question has already been passed upon by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole. On February 26, 1927, when the same question was presented, it was there held that it was the law governing the House of Representatives.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is it a fact that the House adopted the report of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. McKEOWN. The committee report was not adopted at that time because this matter came up before the report of the committee could be acted upon. The Chairman held that it was in order and that it was the law. It is the law so far as this House is concerned.

At that time the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who, I think, is one of the ablest lawyers, not only in this House but in the United States, took the position that it had become a law and that we were bound by it; and there are other members of the Committee on the Judiciary who are eminent lawyers, among them Judge TUCKER, who is a great constitutional lawyer, who agrees that it became a law and is binding upon this House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was not the question whether it had become a law already, and the question was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for that purpose?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; and the Committee on the Judiciary were unanimous on that proposition, that it had become a law. The resolution was put in the RECORD, and we stand on the proposition that, so far as the House is concerned, the great Judiciary Committee of the House, composed of some of the most eminent lawyers of this Nation, have decided that it is a law, and the Chairman, I contend, is bound to give great respect to this precedent and to now hold that it is in order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The purpose of the resolution was to have the House informed. If it had provided otherwise, the gentleman could have brought in additional legislation?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes. Otherwise we could have proceeded to take other action.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The decision precluded other action from being taken?

Mr. McKEOWN. I desired to leave the question to the Judiciary Committee as to whether I should reintroduce the bill in another Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the decision of the committee precluded any other action being taken because they decided the law was in existence?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it not also true that, acting on the acceptance of this as a law, this was included as an item in the deficiency bill which passed the House in the last session?

Mr. McKEOWN. It was. It has already been passed and the item was carried in this deficiency bill at the last session of the Congress. At that time the same point of order was made, and we insist, Mr. Chairman, that this is in order.

The matter having once been decided, the precedent, of course, ought to be very persuasive upon the Chairman. The committee has found that so far as this House is concerned it is a law. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole ruled at one time that it was in order and overruled the point of order. Then the matter was carried in the bill and left this House in the appropriation bill.

I will say this to the Chair: There is not any question in my mind—of course, there may be a question in the minds of some lawyers about it—but that when the first session of a Congress adjourns everything in the House stands in status quo until the next session. It was a long time before we reached that conclusion in the proceedings of this House, as the history of the House will show, and that now a bill not signed by the Speaker may be signed at the next session, and that a bill signed by the Speaker and also by the President of the Senate and not presented to the President still remains in status quo.

The language of the Constitution is that unless a Congress by its adjournment prevents the return of a bill it shall become a law if it is not vetoed or if it is not signed. The fact that it has not been enrolled among the bills at the State Department and made a law, of course, does not change the question as to whether it is a law. The House is not doing anything here except pass upon the question so far as this House is concerned and for the purpose of this legislation. The legislation was passed by both the House and the Senate, but the President did not, for some reason, return the bill. Therefore he let it become a law because he was not prevented by the adjournment of the first session from returning the bill at the succeeding session, because the whole transactions of the House were in abeyance during the time of the recess of the Congress from the first session to the second session.

The Members of Congress have the right under the Constitution to pass upon the question as to whether or not they agree with the grounds upon which the President objects to legislation. The Constitution does not give the President the right to forbid legislation but simply the right to veto legislation; that is, to say, "I object to this bill for the following reasons."

Suppose some great bill of great importance—not a bill of this character, but some great bill of great importance, upon which there would be great party division—had gone to the President upon the last day of the first session of the Congress? Of course, Congress can not deprive the President of his ten days in which to consider a bill, and it has already been determined by the Supreme Court——

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Are there cases on record where the President has returned bills at a subsequent session?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; there are bills. Mr. Madison was the first to return a bill, and Attorney General Miller, in his opinion to President Hayes, I believe it was, recommended that all bills be returned to the Congress, upon which the President disagreed.

As I say, if this had been some bill involving some great question in this country, and the President of the United States should hold that bill and not return it, then the Congress that passed that great measure would be deprived of the opportunity of expressing to the country its opinion as to whether or not it approved or disapproved of the President's action.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will ask the gentleman if this matter was not referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and if that committee did not have exhaustive hearings as to whether or not H. R. 5218 had become a law? Then I will ask the gentleman whether the Committee on the Judiciary did not unanimously, after an exhaustive hearing upon it, find as follows:

That H. R. 5218, "An act to carry into effect the twelfth article of the treaty between the United States and the Shawnee Tribe of Indians, proclaimed October 14, 1868," has become a law of the United States.

I ask the gentleman whether that was not the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary after an exhaustive hearing?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does the gentleman contend that because the Judiciary Committee reached a unanimous conclusion on the question that that made it a law?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; but I say this, that when this matter was exhaustively presented a year ago to the then Chairman of the Whole House on the state of the Union, he said that was persuasive, and based upon that he held this amendment in order. Then the House adopted the amendment and it was placed in the deficiency appropriation bill which went to the Senate and which we know was defeated there because of the filibuster.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield for one question?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. As I understand the situation the gentleman from Oklahoma is pursuing the only method by which the legality of this proposition could be determined.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. You can not bring a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States to mandamus anybody because the Supreme Court can not mandamus Congress into making an appropriation.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is right.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And the gentleman is taking the only possible course to determine the legality of the matter?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Would not the court, upon a proper showing, mandamus the Secretary of State?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. You possibly might reach it that way.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the gentleman beg the question when he talks about mandamusing Congress?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I do not, because the Indians can not secure any relief under the law until Congress has made an appropriation, and the gentleman from Oklahoma is pursuing the only legal way.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the alleged law, under which you are claiming the right to have this appropriation made, being brought into question, you propose now by getting this appropriation in this bill to legalize an alleged act of Congress which has not yet been placed in the form of a law of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Not to legalize it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. How are you going to test its legality except in this way?

Mr. SABATH. It is an act of Congress now. They are trying to proceed under an act which the highest authority here has ruled on and has found to be the law of the land.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to my colleague from Illinois that he misapprehends the issue. The question is whether the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall now determine whether that alleged enactment is a law.

Mr. SABATH. And the committee that investigated the matter carefully, composed of the best legal minds of the House, has stated to the House that it is the law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman, suppose they did, and suppose every Member of this House is convinced that the Judiciary Committee was correct in its construction, it is a legal question as to whether what has been done made that enactment a law, and yet you want the chairman to sit up there and determine whether it is a law or not.

Mr. SABATH. No; a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House has already ruled on it, and the House has acted upon it and decided that it is the law.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I agree with the gentleman that it is a legal question as to whether this bill upon which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] is relying has become a law. Now, how is the gentleman from Oklahoma ever going to test that out, and what opportunity is he going to have to test it out except in the very way that he is bringing it now before the House?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How is any citizen of the United States——

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman further, the gentleman asked a question of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] a moment ago, I do not see how a suit in the courts undertaking to mandamus the Secretary of State would lie, because this is only an act of authorization, and even if it was the law, Congress does not have to make an appropriation to satisfy it. It seems to me the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] is pursuing the only course open to him.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; we are discussing the rules of the House and what the Chairman of the Committee should do now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Secretary of State can not determine this question. Ultimately, the question will have to be determined by the courts.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Exactly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Before we will know positively what the law is.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am only suggesting the procedure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. With respect to any action of the Secretary of State, what sort of mandamus could they issue?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman misunderstood me. I was suggesting a remedy or a method of procedure by which the question might be determined by the courts as to whether under the circumstances such as these an enactment of Congress becomes a law, and in my opinion, I think the procedure would be by way of a mandamus proceeding.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. A mandamus to do what?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But that has nothing to do with the question of whether the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall now determine whether this alleged enactment is in fact a law.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will permit, who could attack the legality of that law—any taxpayer?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is not a question of attacking the legality.

Mr. SABATH. Then it is the law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman apparently takes the position that anything that is printed is the law unless somebody attacks it.

Mr. SABATH. It remains the law of the land until it is repealed or until it has been declared to be not the law.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I had not finished my statement. The proposition is now before the House on the question of legislation authorizing this appropriation. I offer an amendment to this bill in the form of carrying out an act of Congress.

The matter has been referred to the highest legal authority of the House, as I take it, the Committee on the Judiciary. After a very exhaustive examination of the authorities they have found that this is the law. This is for the guidance of this House, and this matter comes here upon a point of order where I can rely upon a former ruling, which is a precedent to guide the Chairman and I feel the Chairman in this case wants to follow the precedent. We are not here attacking anything at all. The House is exercising its authority to legislate as one of the branches of the National Government. The proper committee has advised the House that this is a law.

The Government is entirely protected, whereas my constituents would not be protected. The Government can protect itself when it comes to paying this amount of money, if it is not the law, but there is no other way in which I can test this question.

I have gone to the labor of presenting the matter to the great Judiciary Committee, and the chairman of that committee, Judge Graham, took the floor last year and made an eloquent speech and a convincing speech, and so did other members of that committee, including the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON]. These gentlemen have presented this question and I want to say to the Chair I am willing to stake whatever opinion I have upon constitutional law upon the finding of this committee, which was absolutely unanimous, that it has become a law, and I will yield the floor——

Mr. HASTINGS. Before yielding the floor, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I simply want the gentleman to yield to me long enough to quote the following, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 4931, which was part of the remarks of Chairman GRAHAM when this matter was up before on the same point of order a year ago. The Chair will find this in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under date of February 26, 1927, wnere Chairman GRAHAM, speaking upon this question, said:

> I respectfully suggest to the Chair that a competent committee of the House unanimously came to this conclusion, a conclusion in which I cordially concur and about which I have not even the vestige of a doubt, and in the opinion of the committee this bill became a law and is a sufficient ground for overruling the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I can conceive of no reason which the House had in mind at the time it referred this question to the Judiciary Committee and authorized and required a report, except that should the report be to the effect that the act had become a law it would proceed in the very manner in which it is now being attempted to proceed by this amendment. There could have been no other intelligent reason, to my mind, for asking for a report of a committee of this House on this subject. Of course we did not ask for a report as advice to the courts, for the courts do not need any advice from the House. They may need it, but they do not take it. [Laughter.] The purpose of referring such a resolution and asking for an opinion from one of the arms of this House was to enable the House to prepare and carry out its own function. It is attempting to function now by making an appropriation, and it lies within the power of the House to initiate it.

We have had the report from the Judiciary Committee. It was the unanimous report—a unanimous report from an agency of this House made for the purpose of enabling the House itself to take action. I confess that the reasoning in the report of that committee appeals to my judgment. I believe that if this matter shall go to the court, as we anticipate it may do, if not on this bill then on some other bill, the court will hold with the Judiciary Committee of the House that it is the law. In any event, it does seem to me that the report of this agency of the House, made in response to a demand of the House, is binding on the House, or at least on the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under a situation of this sort. I respectfully submit that the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. LUCE. There is one angle that has not in the debate been brought to the attention of the Chair. It happens that when I came down here just before the session opened I learned of a proposal to change the size of the Committee on the Library. The size of that committee is fixed by statute, and the question arose in my mind as to whether the House could by changing the rules modify a statute.

In such time as I could give to the study of the precedents, I refreshed my memory to the effect that it has been ruled on several occasions that the presiding officer may not pass judgment on the constitutionality of action by the House, but I could find no precedent on the question of whether a presiding officer may pass judgment on the legality, in contradistinction to the constitutionality, of action. May the Chair, under circumstances like these, deny consideration because a printed statute can not be produced? This raises legal questions in addition to those that are constitutional. In this respect as far as my study has gone it would lead me to think that here is a case of novel impression and that the ruling of the Chair may be of considerable consequence at some time in the future.

I confess a doubt in my own mind as to what the ruling ought to be on that particular point, but I should be sorry to have the debate concluded without having brought to the attention of the Chair that there is here a question if the presiding officer may pass judgment upon matters of legality.

I think when this subject was up last year the point was not brought to the attention of the Chair, and so it could not be said that a precedent was established, but it may be as well to bear in mind that one of importance may now be created if the Chair should decide that while the Chair is forbidden by precedent to pass on the constitutional effect of a proposal he may pass on its legal aspect.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that a long line of precedents of the House and under all the rules of the House and the practice of the House it has always been clear that the proponents of a measure similar to this, and under circumstances similar to this, where the question is raised, must be able to produce the law upon which he bases his right to act. I take it that the gentleman from Oklahoma admits that he can not produce the law. The mere fact that the members of the Committee on the Judiciary were unanimous in their conclusion that it is a law is not binding on the House. The Judiciary Committee is not authorized to make law.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. The gentleman would not contend that the mere fact that the Secretary of State neglected to publish a law would vitiate it?

Mr. MADDEN. I would not say that, but there is no question that the Judiciary Committee has no power to make a law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the stand taken by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], that the burden is upon the proponents of the amendment to produce the law, I submit that the physical production of the law is not necessary. Reference or demand has been made for the production of the "printed law." Courts take judicial notice of our laws, and we certainly take judicial notice of our own laws and acts.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to a question from the Chair?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is that law printed? How could the Chair refer anyone to it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not necessary. The gentleman from Oklahoma gave the Chair the reference. He referred to a law passed by the House and Senate, signed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate and submitted to the President of the United States, who failed to sign it. The Chair must take judicial notice of the action of the House and Senate. The physical production of the printed law is not necessary. Courts require you to make physical production of foreign laws and proof if it is sought to establish them as such. The Chair must take judicial notice of the action of the House. It being before the Chair, the Chair must take notice that this House and the Senate passed the law referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma and likewise the Chair must take notice of the subsequent action of the House and the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. The Chair is not passing on the constitutionality of this proposition or upon the legality of the law. The only question before the Chair is whether there is a law which justifies or forms the basis of an appropriation. That is all there is to it.

The constitutionality or the legality of the law may be tested in court if we make the appropriation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] is in error when he says that anyone may mandamus the Secretary of State to certify whether this is a law or not. Such an action would not lie. An official may be mandamused to do a specific act which by law he is obliged to do and which he fails or refuses to do. You can not mandamus the Secretary of State to certify whether a law exists or not. That is not the way to judicially determine whether the law in question is valid or not. The only way in which this law may be tested is by this House making an appropriation of the money, and then if the Secretary of the Interior or of the Treasury or whoever has charge of the payment of the money, refuses to pay it, an interested party may mandamus that official then and the validity of the law would be before the court and question determined.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The report of the Judiciary Committee in which the law is specifically mentioned is a part of the record of this House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Both the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself and, I assume, the Journal of the last Congress show that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was for the purpose of informing and guiding this House and of that the Chair takes notice.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the rule does not apply to an extraordinary case of this sort. To be sure one can not go to the statute book and find the law, because the law is not in the statute books. The very question involved is whether it is a law, and it is embodied in the official records of the House of Representatives. It is a part of the official records of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. And the record of this House is our own record.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Chairman may take judicial notice of that just as the court will take judicial notice of existing statutes. The point of order, I respectfully submit, should be overruled.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I had some part in the discussion of this question when it was before the Committee of the Whole on February 26, last. Stripped of all its verbiage, stripped of all the niceties and refinements of discussion, the question is whether we will pass on the issue of whether the President may employ the so-called pocket veto.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Why should we not pass upon it? It is only a question of order of the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, yes; it is. The Appropriations Committee would have authority to make this appropriation, even if there were no law upon the subject.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It would be subject to a point of order if it did.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I submit that it would not be; that if the Committee on Appropriations under its jurisdiction in the House should see fit to embody this in an appropriation bill it could not be stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me answer there that I think the gentleman is mistaken and will upon reflection, I believe, agree with me. If there is no law upon which an appropriation may be based, whether the Appropriations Committee puts it in a bill or the provision is offered by way of an amendment, then it is subject to a point of order. There must be a law upon which an appropriation is predicated, a law which authorizes the appropriation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There is rarely ever an appropriation bill, as I recall, but carries appropriations where the only possible basis that could have justified them is the general welfare clause of the Constitution of the United States. If a Member undertakes to offer an amendment from the floor of the House, we have a rule which says that there must be a law authorizing the appropriation, and, therefore, it is within the prerogative of the House to decide whether there is a law that justifies the amendment or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me suggest in all deference that the gentleman is confusing in his own mind the rule with respect to germaneness.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I have yielded so much now that I have not been able to say anything that is in my own mind.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. The gentleman made a statement in regard to a pocket veto which I would like to have him explain.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I say it is a question whether the President by holding a bill and not reporting it to the Secretary of State may veto the bill. That is the question, and we are endeavoring to pass upon that. More than that, we are endeavoring to induce the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House to pass upon it and determine that question.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Is there any reason why we should permit the Executive to extend the right of pocket veto beyond the provisions of the Constitution?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no reason why this House, in Committee of the Whole, by ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, should endeavor to pass upon that legal question.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. How are you going to pass upon it in any way?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is not our business to pass upon it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It certainly is, and these people have a right to have it passed upon.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman introduce a bill or resolution to the effect that what he says is the law shall be the law, notwithstanding the fact that the President held an act and did not send it to the Secretary of State within the 10 days.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman to state that after all the question involved was whether the President can use a pocket veto.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is not the gentleman somewhat inaccurate? There is no dispute that the President may, at a certain time use the pocket veto, which the Constitution provides.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But what about other times?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The question is whether the President may use a pocket veto at a time when it is not in order to do so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman says "at certain times." Very well; are we not, then, passing on the question of the President using a pocket veto? I would like to get the judgment of the gentleman from Tennessee. Are we not still passing upon the question of whether the President can use a pocket veto? If the President in employing a pocket veto in this case was within his right, we are legalizing something which would not otherwise be legal.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me suggest to the gentleman. There are certain rights of the Congress just as high as the right of the President. He has the right to veto a bill. The Congress has a right after his vetoing that bill, except in the contingency provided for in the Constitution, to say whether or not it stood for his reasons of action. In this case we have not that opportunity. We could not have, although there were three months of Congress after this legislation passed. I am not quarreling with the President's course which he took upon it, but does not the gentleman from Illinois see the legislative branch has some rights in such cases as well as the Executive brauch, and does the gentleman from Illinois mean to hold to the doctrine that during a recess of the Congress that the President might pocket-veto a bill and estop the legislative branch from any possibility of passing upon the veto?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This body may pass all the legislation it will, but this body certainly can not pass upon constitutional questions as to the power of the President. That will be passed upon by the courts and must be. I submit that there is room here for argument and difference of opinion. Here is the provision of the Constitution which says:

> If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Now, when does Congress by its adjournment prevent its return? Congress expires biennially by limitation. The only time, it would seem, Congress by its adjournment might prevent the return of a bill is when Congress does deliberately adjourn. As I say, there is room for argument. That is the language of the Constitution, "unless Congress by adjournment prevents its return." As I say, there is room for doubt as to whether that is the correct construction, notwithstanding my high regard for the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. Now, if I may be permitted to proceed for a moment, in the last discussion upon the case I propounded an inquiry to the very distinguished gentleman, one of the greatest lawyers in this body, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. GRAHAM, of Pennsylvania, and he answered in this wise:

> If the gentleman will permit by the amendment introduced, it shows clearly what the purpose was; an expression of opinion.

And he states with reference to the Judiciary Committee:

> The committee has no power to say that the act was legal or illegal, but it could inform the House, after research and examination, what the opinion of the committee was.

He admits that we can not pass upon the legality or illegality of the act. I submit that the House has not even adopted or approved of that report, and has not acted upon the report. So far as the report goes, it is only an expression of the opinion of the Judiciary Committee. I might agree with the opinion of the Judiciary Committee in its construction of the Constitution, but I still contend that the chairman of this committee should not be required to pass upon the question of the legality of the enactment, which some people say is a law and which others say is not a law.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes, but I wish to conclude. I do not like to refuse the gentleman, however.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. How does the gentleman know but what the President agrees with the views of the Judiciary Committee, and that the action he took was in conformity therewith? Did he veto it, aside from the pocket veto? How does the gentleman know but that the President agrees with the Judiciary Committee and did not mean to veto the bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is a distinguished member of the bar, and I will ask the gentleman what is his opinion?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If there is no disagreement with the President, what is there to talk about?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the President deliberately failed to send a bill to the Secretary of State, he apparently thought that the effect would be to veto it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The presumption is that the President would agree with this great outstanding lawyer on that Judiciary Committee. The presumption is that the President knows the law just as the presumption is that every citizen knows the law. Every time a point of order is raised it is the duty of this House and of the Chairman of the committee to say whether or not a statute is the law. The presumption in the Supreme Court is that a law is a law unless it is unconstitutional. The gentleman knows that the President did not intend to veto it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know what the President intended. Now just one word more in conclusion. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on February 26 said:

> The question presented by the point of order is somewhat doubtful and has been a subject of much discussion. It probably never will be definitely and finally settled until a decision is rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Without referring to the ruling made by the distinguished Chairman of the committee, his language is pertinent at this time:

It probably never will be definitely and finally settled until a decision is rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

I submit that the Chairman of the committee should not now be required to pass upon, and should not pass upon a question relating to the legality of the passage of an enactment which may or may not be the law. The question which he is called upon to decide is whether there is a law on which this appropriation may be predicated.

Mr. SABATH. What is the ruling of the Chairman of the committee for unless it is to serve as a precedent?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, had the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], who has just taken his seat, concluded the reading of the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House when this particular question was up for consideration at a former session?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I did not intend to leave out anything.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not charge the gentleman with intending to leave out anything, but he stopped suddenly in the reading.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I realize that the present occupant of the chair is not a lawyer, and this question naturally presents to him a matter of difficulty. But I want to suggest to the Chairman that there are two compelling reasons in my opinion that should induce the Chairman to overrule this point of order. As has well been presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the Chair, not being a lawyer, is in possession, by virtue of the records of this House, of a well-considered and deliberate judicial opinion upon the character of this very question by the ablest legal minds of this House, seeking to find a correct interpretation of this peculiar legal proposition. That, to a Chairman of the committee who is not a lawyer by profession, ought to be extremely persuasive, in my opinion. No doubt that is a question that the Chairman is revolving in his own mind, and he will give careful consideration to that opinion. The most controlling reason, in my opinion, why the Chair should overrule the point of order is that the Chair has before him a guide or opinion in the form of a decision of a former Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] partially read, and of which I desire to conclude the reading, which is sufficient to suggest a doubt and which may be, as the gentleman said, a quasi first impression, but not necessarily so. But this decision of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means on this question ought to be conclusive, all other things being equal; ought to be conclusive to the mind of the Chair. Mr. GREEN says:

> While the resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee is merely the expression of that committee, it is an opinion rendered by attorneys of the highest standing and reputation. The Chair has had only a brief interval in which to examine this complicated question. The Judiciary Committee had all the time necessary and rendered a unanimous opinion that the statute in question had been legally enacted.
> The opinion, therefore, although not binding on the House or binding on the Chair, is very persuasive at this time. Accordingly the Chair overrules the point of order.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that by parity of reasoning, where there might be possible doubt in the mind of the Chair as to the legality of the question, the only orderly way in which the legality can be determined is the decision of this House upon the judicial question as well as the parliamentary question involved. Therefore I respectfully suggest that the Chair overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair well appreciates the fact that this is one of the most technical questions that has arisen for some time in the Committee of the Whole. If the Chair were considering this question for the first time and following his own method of reasoning, he would undoubtedly reach a different conclusion.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] has presented the following amendment:

> To be expended in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress (H. R. 5218) entitled "An act to carry into effect the twelfth article of the treaty between the United States and the Shawnee Tribe of Indians, proclaimed October 14, 1868."

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has made a point of order against this amendment on the ground it is not authorized by law. Under all decisions by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole thus far it has been incumbent upon the proponents of an amendment to furnish the authority of law for the proposed appropriation. The Chair has asked the gentleman from Oklahoma to furnish that authority. In the opinion of the Chair that authority has not been furnished in the way considered necessary in the past, namely, by referring to the specific statute.

Another question that has disturbed the Chair considerably in regard to this proposition is that the department of the Government which, during the entire legislative history of our Government, is charged with promulgating the statutes of the country has not listed this law among the statutes or laws passed by the Sixty-ninth Congress. It is also evident the President did not consider it a law, as he did not send it to the State Department.

Furthermore, the Chair is in doubt as to whether one branch of Congress, or even a committee of Congress, can make a law by mere declaration that a certain bill has become a law. The Chair feels that at least such a declaration should be made by both Houses of Congress.

Then the Chair is up against the proposition that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] presented, which has had especial force with the present occupant of the Chair, namely, that the House itself was in doubt on this whole proposition and referred it to the Judiciary Committee, which is the highest judicial authority of the House itself, and this committee has unanimously reported that this legislation had become a law. If he were ruling de novo on the proposition, the Chair would sustain the point of order, but taking into consideration the fact that the highest judicial committee of the House has ruled the other way, and as he knows of no higher authority at the present time, the Chair overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call attention to a matter which I think may be worth something to other departments of the Government.

The Chair has just indicated in his ruling that one of the troubles in his mind was that the Department of State, which has been charged from the beginning of the Government with the promulgation of the acts of Congress, had not promulgated this as a law. This brought to my mind a recollection, the accuracy of which I have just verified, a very interesting historical event in connection with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

While that constitutional amendment was pending there were two States, namely New Jersey and Ohio, that ratified it, who before the proclamation usually issued by the Secretary of State in such cases, had been issued, withdrew their assent and undertook to recall their ratifications.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, issued a proclamation simply stating the facts and not proclaiming the fourteenth amendment as a part of the Constitution. Thereupon the Congress took notice of the matter and took another whirl at this amendment and passed a resolution, the effect of which was to hold that a State could not reconsider a question of ratification even before promulgation of the proclamation by the Secretary of State. Mr. Seward accepted this act of Congress and declared the fourteenth amendment ratified.

So there was a case in which the Congress took an action possibly somewhat on all fours with the one which we have here to-day.

Now, if I may say just one other word, if I am not mistaken one of the acts that was in question before the Judiciary Committee, not the one that we have passed on here, but one of the acts that was in question—and I call this to the attention of my Oklahoma friends—was an act authorizing somebody to bring a suit in the Court of Claims. If the gentlemen want to get a real test of this thing in the courts, if I am correct in my recollection, there is a mighty good chance to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, in the case to which the gentleman refers with reference to the ratification of the fourteenth amendment, the action was taken by the Congress—both Houses of Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not by the House of Representatives only.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the action will be taken here by both Houses.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, no; the two Houses of Congress will not pass upon the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But they will pass upon the appropriation which refers specifically to the act.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly. We could put that in the bill without any law, if we wanted to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma ought not to prevail. In the first place I maintain that there is no law, notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair. I maintain that the refusal to incorporate the item suggested by this amendment in the report of the Appropriations Committee of the House was the thing which the Committee on Appropriations should have done under the authority that exists; that without any authority to appropriate we, as members of the Appropriations Committee, were barred from the right to recommend the appropriation. Of course, I realize that the ruling of the Chair places the question before the House on its merits. I do not consider that we, notwithstanding the arguments made or the ruling just enunciated, should vote to insert this four hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars into the bill. It has not come to us with any recommendation from the President of the United States, who, under the Budget Act, is required to submit for the consideration of the House recommendations for such appropriations as he believes are justified to be made. It is true that irrespective of whether the President submits the matter or not, it is within the power of this committee to insert the item in the bill, but I sincerely hope that until we have more certainty as to what the law is and where the authority for the appropriation resides we will postpone favorable consideration of the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I always regret very much to differ with my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and I usually follow his leadership, but I can not agree with him with reference to this particular amendment.

It seems to me it is a question as to whether or not the United States Government is going to deal justly with these Indians, to whom this claim is due. The Congress of the United States, both the Senate and the House, have formally and regularly decided that this is a just claim and should be paid. It did so when it enacted the law or the bill which was introduced by my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN]. Congress, as I say, has said already that this money is due to the Indians. As I understand, in at least two or three other cases Congress has made appropriations to pay claims similar to this.

Mr. HASTINGS. In three other cases, arising out of the same provisions of the treaty.

Mr. BYRNS. In three other cases, my friend suggests.

Here is a claim not asking for interest but simply asking for the principal due, and it seems to me that under these circumstances, when Congress is on record as having said that these poor Indians are entitled to this money, this Congress ought to go ahead and make the appropriation and pay them what has been already declared to be an honest debt.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, before the vote is taken, that this matter has been considered three times by the House on its merits. It was first brought before the House on a favorable report by the Committee on Indian Affairs; it was passed by the House, and it passed the Senate. A point of order was raised against its inclusion in the appropriation bill last year, just as it was raised to-day, and the House at that time again considered it on its merits and included it in the deficiency bill of a year ago. It is now being considered on its merits again, and, in my opinion, from a study of it, the justice of it, and the fact that no one questions that this money is owed to these Indians, as a matter of equity and justice, we should vote for the inclusion of this in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN), there were—ayes 102, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 28 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 28, after line 23, add the following: "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the act entitled 'An act authorizing an appropriation to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the South Carolina experiment station,' approved March 3, 1927, including the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, fiscal year 1928, and to remain available until June 30, 1929, $25,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Congress passed an act last year to cooperate with the State of South Carolina in the development of its agricultural problems in connection with which there will be required to be constructed an agricultural station. The purchase of a lot of land was involved. The construction of the station, the purchase of the land, and all matters of that sort are to be paid for by the State of South Carolina. The cooperation of the Government is on the basis of experimental work.

The bill that was passed was unfortunate for it allowed a total expenditure under the act of $50,000. The Committee on Appropriations was favorable to the appropriation, but in a study of the law and the facts in the case, it was clear to the committee that to expend $50,000 and stop would be of no use; but the law provided that $50,000 was all that could be expended and the Secretary of Agriculture advised the committee that it would be better not to make any appropriation than to make an appropriation for $50,000 and then stop the work.

Since that time the committee has been advised that it would be better to give them $25,000 and let them begin the work while an effort is made to remedy the defect in the legislation which was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, we have an agreement under which we are to go back to page 54 of the bill on the item for the alteration to naval vessels. There will be more or less desire for discussion of this question and if I may I should like to get an agreement as to the amount of time to be consumed. I do not think there is any desire on the part of the committee to take very much time, and as I understand it, there is no serious desire on the part of those who differ with the committee to want a great deal of time. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUTLER, who is the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and who will have charge of the opposition to the position of the committee, that we make the time not to exceed 30 minutes in discussing this question, with 15 minutes on each side.

Mr. BUTLER. That will suit. I only want two or three minutes myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on this paragraph of the bill and all amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BUTLER. Make it 40 minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I wonder if I can get three or four minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Then I will make no objection.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Reserving the right to object, I want to say to the distinguished chairman of the committee that I represent, in a sense, the minority that is against the provisions in this bill. In the last session of Congress I had charge of a portion of the time.

Mr. MADDEN. How much time does the gentleman want himself?

Mr. MCCLINTIC. I have two amendments, and I should say 15 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. That would not be a fair proportion, would it? Suppose we make the time 40 minutes, 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. How are you going to divide it?

Mr. MADDEN. We will be satisfied with 15 minutes, and give the gentleman 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 15 minutes. That ought to be a fair division.

Mr. BUTLER. I should think it would be for him. [Laughter.] I am willing to vote without any debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 55 after the word "provided" strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The alterations to the capital ships herein authorized shall be subject to the limitations prescribed in the treaty limiting naval armaments ratified August 17, 1923."

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Would an amendment to strike out the paragraph have precedence over an amendment to amend?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph will first be perfected and then the gentleman can offer an amendment to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, it seems to me that the main objection to the elevation of the turret guns on the Oklahoma and Nevada, in the minds of some Members, is the apprehension that to do so will be a violation of the treaty.

In the bill that we passed last February, authorizing the modernization of these ships, it was distinctly written into the law that no modernization should take place that was not subject to the provisions of the treaty, and in the amendment that I have offered I have used the very language in the authorization act.

> The alterations to the capital ships herein authorized shall be subject to the limitations prescribed in the treaty limiting naval armaments ratified August 17, 1923.

Therefore, it can be readily seen that in the authorization act, as well as by the amendment I have submitted, if the elevation of the guns is not in accordance with the terms of the treaty they will not be elevated.

As everyone knows, it is not a legislative prerogative for us to seek to interpret treaties that this Government has with other nations. The jurisdiction of that subject matter is one left to the Executive, and no Executive, it makes no difference who it is, is ever going to embark upon a program that violates either the letter or spirit of any treaty that this Government has with other nations.

If, upon an examination by the Executive of this subject matter, he determines that it is a violation of the treaty, it naturally follows that these guns will not be elevated, but if it is not a violation of the treaty, it likewise follows that the mandate of Congress with reference to this work will be undertaken.

We are leaving to the Executive the prerogative that belongs to him to determine whether or not we are within our treaty rights in doing this.

No doubt a great deal will be said as to what England and Japan have done with reference to the elevation of their guns. I am not so much concerned with what England and Japan have done as I am with what it is our duty to do within our treaty rights.

Why debate what England and Japan are doing? That is beside the question. The question is, What is our duty in this matter to our country? Our duty is to elevate the guns if we are within our rights, thereby increasing the efficiency of the Navy, which in turn affords a more adequate national defense. There is no Member of this House who does not at all times desire that the Navy of his country be in the highest state of efficiency, and if it increases the efficiency of the Navy to elevate these guns, which there can be no doubt about it doing, they should be elevated if it is not contrary to the treaty, even though other nations signatory to the treatry have not seen fit to do likewise.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into a lengthy discussion as to the great benefit it will be to the Navy to elevate these guns and the other guns of our Battle Fleet, for the House has heard this matter discussed in much detail on many occasions.

At the last session of Congress, by a two-thirds vote, after a lengthy discussion and with the opposition to the measure led by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN, by a vote of 245 to 111, this House went on record to modernize these ships and to elevate the guns. Suffice it to say, by the elevation of the turret guns 15°, the range will be increased from 21,000 to 24,000 yards. By the elevation of the guns of the Oklahoma and Nevada to 30°, it will increase the maximum range to 34,000 yards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, it is rather embarrassing to find one's self the only member of a great committee to take a certain stand on a public question. I have given this subject a great deal of thought. I have never importuned a single individual or asked him to vote with me. I feel that each person should be in charge of his own conscience, and he should look at this question from every angle. Then if he thinks that we should elevate these guns, as they no doubt will be elevated if this amendment should prevail, he ought to vote with my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

I look at this question in a little different way. Since the last session of Congress Lindbergh has flown across the ocean and Byrd, Maitland, Goebel, and possibly four or five others have shown to the Nation what aviation means in the future. If we can use a battleship in any of our wars in the future, then we ought to elevate the guns on these ships and we ought to repair them in the manner in which they need repairing. However, some of the leading experts of the Nation say that we can not use battleships any more. We know that in the last war, for a considerable portion of time, this type of ship was parked up one of our great rivers, and some leading authorities say that if we should ever have another war we would have to put these ships as far up the river as possible, in order to save them. One 1,100-pound bomb sank the U. S. S. Virginia, and one great bomb sank H. M. S. Ostfriesland. A 4,000-pound bomb, if you please, will blow a hole some 68 feet wide and 28 feet deep, and there is no man to-day in America who is an authority on the subject who will not say to you that we could sink every battleship we have in 15 minutes unless they are properly protected against aircraft. No person up to date who has had a knowledge of this subject of the air will tell you that we can ever use a battleship in any war against modern nations. If that is true, and it has been testified to under oath, why waste this money in elevating the guns, particularly when there is no nation to-day that has a ship with guns that will shoot any further than some of the ships owned by this country. What does this mean? It means that the guns on every ship in the world belonging to major nations, the minute we start to elevate our guns, will have their guns elevated so that they may be able to shoot as far as the guns on the ships of the United States. Perhaps it does not violate the terms of the treaty, but it does violate the spirit of the treaty, and that is the reason I am standing here making the best fight that I know how. What about shooting a projectile 30 miles when you can not see the target. It will have to describe an arc. Do you think that a projectile shot 30 miles could hit a target the size of a ship? Experts say that it will take 50,000 shots to ever strike the target. Of course, if we could anchor that target, and then could have observers overhead who would radio back whether the projectile went to the side or over or short of the target we might be able to hit it finally, but you remember during the World War when those great German guns fired into Paris? I do not think any two projectiles fell within half a mile of each other.

If I am correctly informed, no Member of Congress has any personal knowledge concerning the proposed expenditure of $13,150,000 on the battleships U. S. S. Oklahoma and U. S. S. Nevada. I have pending before the Rules Committee a resolution that proposes to authorize a committee to make a full investigation of this subject. This Congress should know something about the facts in the case. I defy any Member to point out the character of the proposed repairs from the information given in the hearings, other than the elevation of certain guns.

What about our battleships? Can they be utilized as an asset in time of war, or will they be a liability?

No war in the future will be concluded without aircraft playing a big part, and the nation having a superiority in modern lines of offense and defense will be successful. There are certain officers in the Navy who dislike aircraft more than the devil does holy water. How many remember the fine example of deception and four-flushing that took place in connection with the sinking of the Washington? Who remembers Admiral Hillary Jones's great effort when he read into the record of the Lambert committee all the poison he and his coconspirators could concoct against aircraft?

Did any Member ever hear of the six planes that made practically perfect scores at Guantanamo in dropping bombs at targets much smaller than battleships? What about the record made by the Fifth Fighting Squadron on October 17 last at altitudes of 500 feet, 1,000 feet, 1,500 feet, and 2,000 feet? These planes were flown by Lieutenants Dillon, Warwick, Feher, Ackers, Barmer, and Rice. Some 250 bombs were dropped. The report is that the record of hits was so fine that the Navy fears to give out the results on account of having a disastrous effect on its ship-building program.

At this point I desire to incorporate in my remarks a short article written by Owen L. Scott and distributed by the Consolidated Press:

BATTLESHIP'S DOOM SEEN AT ARMY AVIATION FIELD

By Owen L. Scott

WRIGHT FIELD, DAYTON, OHIO, October 27.—This country can rest snug and content, unafraid of any possible attack from foreign warships. The Air Corps is sure of that, now that the brand new type of bombers are withstanding the tests here at Wright Field.

"Not a battleship afloat can stand up under one 2,000-pound bomb dropped from an airplane and properly aimed," they advise you here. And the new bombing ships being put through the paces right now will carry a 4,000-pound bomb with ease. They also can carry two of the 2,000-pound variety.

It took just one 1,100-pound bomb to sink the U. S. S. Virginia during the trial tests, and on the basis of that performance, Brig. Gen. William Mitchell made his claims about the effectiveness of airship bombing on warships. These new planes and the new bombs up to the 4,000-pound kind are a big step forward from General Mitchell's time.

But the Air Corps not only is getting ready for sea fights. Battles in the next war often will be fought out up at the ceiling of the sky, out of sight of the earth, the planners expect.

Victory in air fighting goes usually to the highest and fastest fliers. Working with the supercharger principle, developed at the Air Corps laboratory here, American fighting planes now fly as high and as fast as any. But it is expected that before long very long another type plane will come out of the laboratory to fly even higher than any before.

If the next big war were fought now there would be observation planes flying 175 miles an hour doing reconnaissance. Bombers carrying tremendous loads of "eggs" would trail along at 125 miles an hour. Back of them and above in formation would be pursuit planes capable of doing 200 miles an hour and of flying 30,000 feet and more.

Once an enemy showed, these little ships would have to gauge him. Instead of the "dog fights" on a single-handed scale such as in the last war, these new air battles would be in formation. Pilots maneuver in squad groups just as on the ground, and they are in constant communication by telephone with one another. Maneuvering for an air battle would carry them up as high as they could go, with the advantage on the side of the highest fliers.

Reserve pursuit planes would come up to protect the bombers. Dropping of these destructive projectiles is no longer a haphazard matter. Sighting is down to a science and the actual dropping of the bomb, once the proper position is obtained, is automatic. Hits on a small target are assured 50 per cent of the time at 10,000 feet.

One 4,000-pound bomb when dropped creates a crater in the earth 65 feet across and 28 feet deep. It would almost demolish a small town or big manufacturing plant. Gas bombs would do the rest.

In their sky battles the pursuit planes would use new 50-caliber machine guns, shooting projectiles about twice as large as the ordinary machine-gun bullet and much more destructive.

They have developed an airplane muffler which could be used on observation planes. Flying up above the clouds so high as to be out of sight of land and with muffler which would keep the enemy from hearing their approach, these observation planes could photograph enemy territory with thoroughness. The Air Corps' long-range camera shoots through fog or clouds.

No sensible person will deny that a battleship can be sunk or put out of commission by aircraft. Every aviator that I ever heard testify was positive of this fact. Yet there are those who are living in the past, who represent the ideas of the "whiskered" age and want to go to heaven standing on the bridge of one of these old "mud turtles." A fleet is no faster than its slowest ship. Battleships have to be protected by submarines, cruisers, destroyers, and supply ships. Such a squadron would have to hover together for protection like a covey of quail, and a few lucky pot shots from the enemy would about end a war.

The old cry of the Navy was for ships to protect our cities; now it is our sea lanes and foreign commerce. I would like to have some one tell me how battleships could be efficiently used when their maximum speed, taking fuel-oil consumption into consideration, is less than 12 knots. What this country needs is some new blood in the Navy. When you train men up along certain lines their minds become concreted and there is no room for new ideas. The greatest blessing that could come to this country would be the dropping of the retirement age so that those who are married to the battleship idea could forever rest at peace at the expense of the Government.

The U. S. S. Oklahoma and U. S. S. Nevada have a replacement date of 1936 in the disarmament agreement. It will be 1930 before these ships can be reconditioned. The amount asked for in this legislation would build one new cruiser, having a speed of more than 30 knots. The President of the United States, in his message to Congress at the beginning of this session, called attention to the need for additional aircraft, submarines, and cruisers, having nothing to say concerning battleships. I am of the opinion that he realized the importance of basing our national defense for the future on speedier crafts and new appliances used in war.

It seems to me that the time has come to stop wasting money on useless expenditures. If I am correctly informed our Budget estimate for 1929 is more than $4,000,000,000. We have confronting this Congress the need of a great flood-control appropriation. The farm legislation should not be sidetracked, and, as far as I am concerned, I am not going to vote away the taxpayers' money on a type of ship which will cost approximately $50,000,000 to construct, when 90 per cent of our people know that such a ship can be sunk in a few minutes by aircraft.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this side will have but one speech and we want to use that to close the debate.

Mr. BUTLER. Where is the burden resting?

Mr. MADDEN. The burden rests on the side that makes the proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. Then having the burden, we should have the conclusion.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; the committee has the conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to speak now, but I would like to know what I have to answer. I yield three minutes to Mr. TABER.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I believe in the strictest economy in Government expenditures consistent with keeping our equipment and plant in shape. The position that I am going to take to-day is right in line with that. Of the ships of our Navy, 18 capital battleships, 9 have a range which either exceeds or is comparable to the range of the guns on ships of Great Britain and other countries, but 9 more have a range which is from 2,000 to 3,500 yards short of the range of the ships which Great Britain has. The Oklahoma and the Nevada are two of the ships which have this short range. Their range is somewhere around 21,000 yards. In action these ships would be merely targets. That is all that we could expect. What is the use of spending $13,000,000 to build a little bit bigger and a little bit better target? Why not spend $940,000 more and have ships that can hit? When I want to fight I want to be able to hit the other fellow before he hits me or at least as quickly, and that is the reason why we need to elevate these guns, so as to increase the range of the ships from 3,000 to 4,000 yards and put them where they belong. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, considering the distinguished Republican source from which I got my time my conscience troubles me about the remarks I intend to make. It is the most distressing thing to me that in all debates on naval bills the Republican Party falls to pieces and have presented nothing but engagements between the leaders of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Republicans promised a party government, and yet on this important question of the Navy they are always in disagreement.

The Republicans have bragged so much about the Washington disarmament conference that it has taken five years to make them realize that it was a great blunder. The Republican press agents in 1922 had the people believing that we had a naval parity with Great Britain and only recently Republicans on the floor of this House have conceded the faults of this ballyhoo. It is commendable of the Republican chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee that he has been brave enough to try to redeem the Navy from its low state brought about by Republican administrations. His attitude and that of the Speaker are entirely different from the attitude of the administration which has made frantic efforts to get the other powers of the world to disarm, offering blue prints and obsolete vessels for the scrap heap if Great Britain and Japan would destroy new construction.

Some fear that the amendment may violate the sacred disarmament treaty. Other powers have violated it by post-conference auxiliary construction. If the 5-5-3 ratio to capital ships was to be a constant, then there should have been maintained a status quo as to auxiliaries. To agree with some statesmen it would have to be understood that in a war with Great Britain only the tonnage of capital ships would get into action and the other naval vessels would carry the spectators.

Hughes failed in Washington and Balfour triumphed. Poor old Hughes. It was one of the few times in his life he was trimmed. The brains of the Republican party in 1922 were too busy stealing oil reserves, robbing veterans, playing poker, and getting out labor injunctions to pay attention to the naval conference. The diplomatic destruction of the Navy at the conference was followed by a guerrilla warfare on the Navy under the leadership of Admiral Economy. Economy has become another word for stupidity. When we cease to have an Army and Navy we cease to have a country. Here is an opportunity for the administration to make amends to the country. Listening to some American statesmen arguing not to build against Great Britain, one would think Great Britain was building a great navy because it fears Switzerland. I do not choose to accept the good intentions of Great Britain toward us when they refused to adjust their naval situation with a view to parity as they were given an opportunity at Geneva.

It only costs us 11½ cents per capita to operate our Army and Navy, or about $6 per year. Great Britain spends about $15 a year per capita. We have three times the wealth of Great Britain and six times the wealth of Japan. We have to preserve the self-government of 115,000,000 people and the rights of 12,000,000 people in our outlying possessions. We have a transoceanic and a coastwise commerce larger than Great Britain. Our foreign trade is about ten billions annually. Our investments abroad amount to twenty-five billions.

While we could feed ourselves in case of war, there are a great number of essentials in industry and in essential drugs that we must procure from abroad so that we must have a Navy to protect our ships on the sea.

There is nothing in the minutes of the disarmament conference to indicate that we can not elevate our guns. There are a great many things to indicate that Great Britain should not have increased its auxiliary forces. We must depend on a strong Navy. Harbor forts are not strong, and on the fate of this amendment may rest the fate of this country as a leading power of the world. A vote against the amendment is a vote to send 2,500 American officers and sailors to certain death. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House has not inferred that the Committee on Appropriations is hostile to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and by any vote taken in committee had indicated that the appropriation therefor should not be made. The fact is when the vote is taken I think you will find that a substantial majority of the Committee on Appropriations feel that this amendment and the appropriation incident thereto should be approved. Congress at its last session directed that this should be done. The President has submitted in his report to Congress a recommendation that it be done, and just why there should now be any refusal to carry out the recommendation of the President in this regard is more than I can understand. No Congress in the past, no Congress in the future, will refuse appropriations necessary to keep in commission the battleships we now have, and so long as we vote appropriations to keep these battleships in commission you must be willing to vote such sums as those best qualified to speak say are absolutely required to make those ships efficient within the limitations of the treaty. That is the purpose of this amendment, and it is folly to expend millions of dollars in maintaining a personnel on those battleships and refuse to follow the advice of the experts in placing the ships in such condition that they will be efficient if called on for action. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask how much time the opposition has?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 5 minutes, the gentleman from Illinois 12 minutes, and the gentleman from Oklahoma 5 minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, this is an age of progress. Speed will be the determining factor in all military engagements in the future. Speed on the water, speed on the land, and speed in the air, and the nation that depends upon old, antiquated, obsolete equipment, which were in order during the Civil War, is liable to bow its head in humility. You can do just as you please in this particular instance, but as long as I am charged with any responsibility I am going to lift my voice in favor of these modern up-to-date appliances in order that the people of this Nation may have the best protection and best fighting units on the sea, and when it comes to those who are qualified to speak, as the distinguished gentleman from Alabama has said, I place very little, if any, credence on a lot of old superannuated officers whose minds have become concreted to the extent that they could not accept a new idea. Have not they done everything on earth possible to kill aircraft? Have not they tried to hide the records made relative to efficiency in this great branch of the service?

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has made a very entertaining speech for the purpose of showing this House why a suitable appropriation should be made available to be used in the elevation of guns on battleships. He laid special stress on the fact that certain other ships of this same type, belonging to other nations, have a superior speed to our battleships and this may be true, yet he did not say that other ships had a superior range to our own. To my mind this speech would have been a remarkable disclosure had it been delivered along about the Civil War period. It would have been appropos to the situation; it would have dealt with matters that then affected the kind of naval equipment that are called the backbone of the Navy.

It may be true that certain battleships belonging to other nations can speed a few knots faster than our ships, but when it is taken into consideration that we have a type of fighting ship that can make a speed of more than five times that of a battleship and drop a bomb that would blow one of these monsters off the face of the sea, to me it seems foolish that we should waste so much time on such a measure.

Much has been said about the disarmament conference. Nearly everyone believes that this was a colossal mistake; yet the intent was good; and if our representatives had received the proper advice from the Navy, we would not have sunk all of the new ships and retained a lot of old hulks that are now obsolete. Those who participated in the disarmament conference had to depend upon naval officials for advice, and the same kind of advice that was given on that occasion is now being given to certain Members of Congress in asking that they vote to patch up a lot of old ships that can only be used in peace times.

It is to be regretted that the example of Lindbergh, Chamberlain, Byrd, Goebel, Maitland, Hegenberger, and others who have startled the world with their demonstration of air navigation, have not apparently in any way influenced a certain board that has jurisdiction over matters affecting the Navy. Why waste this money? Has not the President called attention to the need of aircraft, submarines, and cruisers? You can build one of the new cruisers with the amount asked for in this bill that has a speed many times faster than any of our battleships. Do you know that a fleet can not be faster than its slowest ship? If we have the fleet retarded by one of the old-fashioned fighting ships, one that requires a whole fleet of different kind of fast ships to protect it from being sunk, why waste the money in this manner?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLINTIC. In a moment. Let us put our money in up-to-date appliances. Let us follow the direction of the best minds in this country, and when we have done that we shall have put our Navy into a state of efficiency that will enable it to take care of every situation in the future. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. ANDREW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, what we really have to decide to-day is whether or not this House will support the spirit of the Washington conference. The spirit of that conference was, so far as battleships were concerned, that we should have a fleet equal to that of Great Britain and which would stand in the ratio of 5 to 3 with that of Japan.

The realities of that conference, as we subsequently discovered, were that our fleet was left inferior in number, tonnage, speed, and in the range of its guns. We came out of that conference with 18 battleships as against 22 of Great Britain. Our total displacement was about 525,000 tons as compared with Great Britain's 600,000 tons. Every one of our battleships was exceeded in speed by all of the British battleships, and 13 of our battleships were outranged by all of the 22 ships of the British fleet. We can not change, according to the terms agreed upon by the conference, the number of our ships or their tonnage, nor is it possible for us to change their speed; but we can remedy the defect, in so far as the range of guns is concerned, so that in the event of an engagement we should not be riddled by their fire without being able to exchange a shot.

There were five signatories to the treaty—Great Britain, Japan, France, Italy, and the United States. Japan sees no objection. Neither does France or Italy. Secretary Hughes, our delegate at the conference, says that we can raise the elevation of our guns without contravention of the treaty's terms. Secretary Kellogg also agrees. Only Great Britain protests. The line of our duty could not be more clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield one-half a minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. I think that will give me one minute and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not so much concerned about the Washington treaty while we have a Department of State to interpret it, but I am concerned about this one fact: I am thinking of the 2,500 officers and men who will man these two ships a couple of years from now, and certain members of the Committee on Appropriations are attempting to muzzle their guns. They are saying to these 2,500 officers and men, "Go in and do the best you can with guns that can not shoot."

Every big gun in the British Navy and every big gun in the Japanese Navy outshoots every big gun on the Oklahoma and the Nevada by from 2 miles to 6 miles, and yet these gentlemen seriously come before us and suggest an expenditure of nearly $13,000,000 to recondition these ships. Make them as nearly first class as it is humanly possible to do, in every essential, but the most important one—the right to be able to hit the target. They will not be worth "a tinker's damn" if we muzzle their guns, and that is what this bill does. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, future naval engagements will be fought at long ranges, where nations will stake everything upon the issue of a single battle and the hitting force of its most powerful ships. Unless the guns on the Oklahoma and Nevada are elevated, they can never hope to get into the battle in its early stages. They and their 2,500 officers and men will be targets for any enemy. What a horrible thing to comprehend!

Much uncertainty prevails in the House as to when and if the Japanese and British big guns were actually increased in elevation. When the time for battle arrives it will make little difference whether the enemy's guns were elevated before or after the Washington conference. It will be a fight to a finish, and our men should therefore be equipped with fighting material that will crush the enemy before he has a chance to get set. We assign men to certain fighting positions. They have no personal choice. To deny them at least the same rights and protection that their enemy has would be disgraceful. Let us vote to elevate the guns. More power to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one and one-half minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I never lied to this House since I became its Member long ago. I have never misled it knowingly. Great Britain does not care whether we raise these guns or not. I defy any man to contradict my statement or to controvert it, but I will not suffer anyone to compel me to state my authority. Moreover, it has come from the present Secretary of State that what is proposed here is not a violation of the Washington treaty. Secretary Hughes wrote a similar opinion a few years ago. I am to blame for the changing opinion the House is in. I thought in 1924 the guns on our great ships should not be elevated because it might break the spirit of this conference. The British have broken the spirit of that conference now, and are proposing to build cruisers which will cost us millions of dollars to strengthen our sea defenses. Hence the spirit of the conference is gone. No one stands anywhere to deny it.

My friend declines to proceed. If he says anything that needs denial I shall ask permission to answer him. The Japanese have elevated their guns. The British have elevated their guns in the fleet on two ships that they have finished since the treaty was made. I say to you that the British care nothing whatever whether our guns are elevated. "Give our men who sail them the same chance in a contest that the men on other ships opposed to them will have." [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in a few moments you will be called upon to determine whether or not you will put into the appropriation bill an amendment providing for the elevation of the guns upon two of the battleships of the American Navy, the Oklahoma and the Nevada, two ships whose overhaul will occur during the coming year.

The Committee on Appropriations omitted such provision and the chairman of the committee has asked me to outline to you the point of view of the majority of the members of the committee. The vote that you will take is probably one of the most important votes that you will be called upon to give during the Seventieth Congress.

The question is not a personal one with me, nor is it a personal matter with any member of the committee. The question is one that must be met in good conscience by every Member of the House as he realizes the responsibility of his vote.

Whether or not we shall provide for the elevation of the guns upon several of the battleships of the American Navy is of some importance because it involves money. For the two ships that you are now considering the amount involved will aggregate $940,000. Even so, and while I believe that the needs of the Navy in other lines are so great that this amount of money could be better expended for the Navy, I am going to ask you in the few minutes at my disposal to consider the question from other points of view.

On August 17, 1923, the last of the nations that were parties to the Limitation of Armaments Conference that was held in Washington ratified that agreement. The treaty that was then entered into sought to limit naval programs of the leading nations of the world. The problem that you are now called upon to consider is whether or not under that treaty you have the right to do that which is proposed. The most valuable possession of any Member of this House as he aspires to leadership and effectiveness in the House is his good name, the faith, and the confidence that the Members of this Chamber repose in him. So, too, the good name of a nation is its most powerful tower of strength among the nations of the world.

The limitation of armaments treaty deals with battleships and it contains a provision that renders altogether doubtful the right of the United States under the treaty to elevate the guns upon our battleships as you are asked to do.

Now, let us consider some of the matters with which the conference dealt. The conference dealt with the number of battleships and the tonnage that might be maintained by the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and other nations. But when the treaty was drafted the battleships of these several nations were not of equal age or of equal strength. As a result, while a theoretical tonnage was fixed for each nation, the treaty had regard for the status of the ships of the several nations, and the United States was authorized to maintain 18 battleships and to substitute for 2 that were at that time the oldest of our ships 2 other battleships upon their completion. Great Britain was permitted to retain for a time 18 battleships and 4 battle cruisers, 4 of the ships of this type to be replaced by the Rodney and the Nelson upon their completion. This replacement has just occurred.

I mention the foregoing that you may understand that an effort was made to provide equal strength in battleships, though the number of ships and the tonnage were not exactly alike.

When the question of strengthening the hulls of the ships was reached it was provided that blisters could be added. For the protection of decks of ships against aircraft, it was provided that decks could be strengthened. When the question of guns, involving number of guns and caliber, was reached, it was well known that the ships of Great Britain and the ships of the United States did not have the same number of guns nor guns of the same caliber.

For instance, the United States had twenty-four 16-inch guns and Great Britain 18. Of 15-inch guns, the United States had none and Great Britain 100. Of 14-inch guns, the United States had 60 and Great Britain none. And so with guns of other caliber the navies were not alike. Even so, the representatives of the United States at the conference must have felt that by and large the strength of the guns of the battleships of the United States approximately matched the strength of the guns of Great Britain.

On all the subjects to which I have just referred definite provision was made within the treaty.

Not one of those questions is involved here. The problem before you is whether or not under the treaty the United States has the right to elevate the guns upon our battleships.

Now, let us see whether or not the treaty contains any statement that will assist us in the problem.

In chapter 2, part 9, subdivision "d" of section 1, we find this language:

> No alterations in side armor, in caliber, number, or general type of main armament shall be permitted.

You will notice that there is nothing in the language I have just read that specifically sets forth whether or not the elevation of guns may be modified. Some four years ago allegation came to our Navy Department that Great Britain had elevated the guns upon some of her battleships. This assertion was immediately conveyed to the Congress by the Navy Department, and on the strength of it the Congress passed an act appropriating money for the elevation of guns upon the battleships of the United States.

Great Britain at once informed our Government that the representations that had been made touching gun elevation were not true; that she had not elevated her guns following the Washington conference; and more than that, she filed with the State Department of our Government a protest against the elevation of guns by the United States, resting her protest upon her contention that it was in violation of the limitation of armaments treaty.

The Congress had adjourned by the time the protest was received and the Navy Department decided it should not proceed with elevation of guns upon American ships until the question could be submitted again to the Congress. Upon the reconvening of Congress the provision that had been passed for gun elevation was repealed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FRENCH. I can not yield right now.

Since that time the Navy Department has been anxious for reenactment of authority for increasing the elevation of our guns upon the theory that such action upon our part is not in conflict with the limitations treaty and upon the theory that by reason of the difference of gun elevation upon the part of the ships of Great Britain and the ships of the United States, the Navy of Great Britain is superior in gun power to the gun power of our own Navy.

Now, let us see what there is to this contention.

In gun range, I am not able to give definite information on the Rodney and the Nelson, the two new capital ships of Great Britain. Our Navy Department believes they are in the class with our ships of longest range. Among other capital ships the range of gunfire is not the same. Five of our ships excel in range all the ships of Great Britain whose range we know, while in others our ships are inferior.

And may I say that the figures that I am quoting are figures that have been furnished by our Navy Department to the committees of the Congress.

The United States has three battleships, each of which will shoot 34,500 yards; one that will shoot 30,500 yards; and one, 30,700 yards. On the other hand, the Hood, of Great Britain, will shoot 30,300 yards, while the two new ships that have just come into commission, the Rodney and the Nelson, our Navy Department to-day has been unable to advise me definitely upon, but I am advised that it is believed these two ships have the gun range of our greatest ships.

When a lawyer wants to determine the meaning of language that is ambiguous, he endeavors to ascertain what was in the minds of those who shaped the language. With this thought I have endeavored to ascertain what was in the minds of the members of the conference that made the treaty. I was advised upon the authority of the chairman of the conference when he was Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, that the subject of range of guns in a comparative way was not discussed by the conference and that the language used in the treaty was not intended purposely either to prohibit or to permit gun elevation.

So, then, we must determine the question from the language itself.

In doing that may I bring to your attention this thought: We ought to do nothing that will cause any other nation that is party to the treaty to doubt the good faith of the United States. In following that course I insist before the Members of this Congress and the country that there is no occasion for raising the elevation of our guns or for even discussing the question. We are superior in part, and in part we fall below; in short, we here have a situation that is somewhat similar to the situation that exists in the matter of number of guns, caliber, and tonnage.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has said this has the approval of the former Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Not now.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman has referred to my argument, and I think he should yield.

Mr. FRENCH. I can not yield now.

As a matter of fact, Secretary Hughes, in the letter that was read the other day, did not say he favored the elevation of guns, but he expressed himself as believing that nothing in the treaty was in conflict. But what else did he say? He declared such a course would provoke competition, which we seek to avoid. Here is his language:

> I am of opinion, however, that while such changes as would be contemplated in the case of American ships would not constitute a violation of the terms of the treaty, they would tend to evoke the competition which it has been the policy of this Government to mitigate.

Consider then this factor: If the United States shall elevate the guns on all our capital ships, then an inequality of unreasonable degree in gun range would exist in favor of the United States.

Finally, then, we are not going to have war with Great Britain. Nobody believes that. When it comes to the general condition of the capital ships of the Navy of the United States, having in mind the extensive overhauling that we have given six of them, we have a Navy that is stronger in capital ships than it was the day the limitation of armaments conference treaty was signed.

There is one other thought I must leave with you. The Navy of the United States needs cruisers; it needs submarines of the larger type, and while the money involved in the program of elevation of guns is not large when compared with the total of naval budgets, I submit the money should be applied where it is needed and where we clearly have a right to strengthen the Navy under the treaty. More than that, under the limitation treaty, an orderly process has been outlined under which replacement of battleships will be commenced. That program for the United States will begin in 1931 and the program as to the two ships that are involved in the pending amendment will come up in orderly way for replacement in 1936.

Gentlemen, I submit that with so little to be gained as it is urged would be gained through the elevation of guns, and with the conscious realization that we at least will cause the Government of the United States to be suspected of placing an arbitrary interpretation upon a doubtful clause of a treaty and thereby of doing an act that will to some extent disturb good will that ought to hold for us, the amendment proposed by the gentleman should not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided and there were—ayes 215, noes 75.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment to offer, on page 54, line 21, strike out the figures "$5,635,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$6,575,000."

Mr. MADDEN. The committee accepts that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: On page 54, line 21, strike out the figures "$5,635,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$6,575,000."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, this merely corrects the figures of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks a separate vote on the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 78, after line 14, insert as a new paragraph the following:
> "For transportation of the Army and its supplies, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditures in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $578,110."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM)—ayes 112, noes 190.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 1, a bill to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1, to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important measure and there have been a great many requests for copies of this bill by outside people who are interested in the tax measure. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Oregon that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD in order that the country generally may have an opportunity to read its provisions.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall be unusually brief in submitting the bill at the outset. The most important features of the bill are perfectly well understood. The technical provisions, in my judgment, might well be permitted to stand until the time when it is read for amendment, except as Members may see fit to make some inquiry at the conclusion of my remarks on the general features of the bill.

I will ask that you kindly do not interrupt during my general statement, but at the conclusion I shall be pleased to answer any questions that gentlemen may see fit to propound with reference to the tax provisions of the bill or any other question to which they may wish to make inquiry.

Mr. Chairman, the country and Congress is to be congratulated that under the wise management of our public affairs and careful supervision of our national expenditures the revenues of the Government have produced a surplus above expenditures. While this surplus will decrease, it is likely to continue in sufficient amounts to make it advisable to reduce taxation. The Committee on Ways and Means therefore presents this bill.

Reduction of taxation is a much more pleasant task than increasing it. I sincerely hope that we may never have to increase taxation, yet if we had yielded to the importunities of many of the parties who appeared before us I am quite certain that in the near future we would not only have been compelled to restore some of the old taxes or levy new ones but would find it necessary to issue bonds to make up for the ensuing deficit.

It is unfortunate that those who appear before the committee at the hearings or otherwise make demands upon it are either working for their own pecuniary interests or represent those who have a personal and pecuniary interest in the proposition they favor. As a result there are few to speak for the people at large. The committee hears mostly parties that are liable to be biased or prejudiced, and the committee must endeavor to take care of the public.

Some of the persons who appeared before us seemed to care little whether a deficit was created if they got what they wanted. I consider this the worst possible policy. We have heretofore been pointing with pride to the fact that our Nation had each year a surplus in its Treasury and at the same time our taxes were not oppressive and did not prevent a general condition of prosperity. Under these conditions, with our national debt being rapidly reduced, there is no other nation in the world whose credit stands so high and which can fund its debts at so low a rate of interest. If we adopted a policy which even occasionally produced a deficit, in the long run it would be extremely disastrous and costly to the taxpayers, for it would increase the rate of interest in all our new obligations, which are used to take up our bonds now outstanding. If new taxes were levied, it would have a bad effect on business. If bonds were issued it would impair our credit. More than all this, it would injure our standing as a nation of power and financial strength unequalled in the world, alike prepared for war and leading in peaceful prosperity, a condition which defies aggression and invites the friendship of all nations.

During the war and for many years thereafter we were in an abnormal condition. The currency was inflated and profits were high; expenditures were enormous, and we were compelled to levy taxes accordingly. The inevitable reaction followed the war. A period of business depression set in which reached its lowest point in 1921. As usual in such cases the pendulum swung too far, and gradually conditions improved until they seemed to reach the peak in 1926. They receded somewhat this year and probably will improve to some extent in 1928, but business is now fairly well stabilized and the only changes that we are to expect are from its ebb and flow. That being the case, the rates carried in the bill should be as low as will permit the Government to be properly administered and provide for the ultimate payment of our great debt. No more should be taken than is necessary, but enough should be provided so that there will be no reasonable anticipation of a deficit.

Three principles were followed by the committee. First, that the reduction should not be such as would produce a deficit in the Treasury; second, that the reductions should be distributed where relief appeared to be more necessary and advisable; and, third, that the taxes that had not been reduced since the war should be given special attention. Obviously this required that the committee should first determine the amount of reduction. This amount was necessarily somewhat indefinite, but the majority of the committee agreed that in no event should it exceed $250,000,000. The amount recommended by the Treasury was $225,000,000, and the majority endeavored to keep as close to that amount as was possible. I shall not go into details as to these figures. That matter will be taken up and discussed fully to-morrow by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

In considering the subjects of taxation where there had been no reduction since the war, our attention was first called to the case of corporations. It seemed to be generally considered that the corporations were entitled to a reduction, and the question before the committee was as to how much that reduction should be. Corporation taxes have not been reduced since the war. In fact, there has been a claim made that they were raised, but that is not correct. The first tax levied in war time upon corporations was 10 per cent, but besides this tax there was also levied an excess-profits tax, from which we derived an enormous revenue during the war. Subsequently the excess-profits tax was repealed, and in order to in part make up for it, the corporation tax was increased from 10 to 12½ per cent. In the last revenue bill the tax on the value of corporate stocks was repealed, and in the place of that tax an additional 1 per cent was added to the corporation-income tax, making it 13½ per cent. The committee reduced this rate from 13½ per cent to 11½ per cent, or a reduction of two points—not 2 per cent, as some might say, because that is not the correct way of figuring it—but a reduction of two points in the tax. This was made applicable to all corporations, including insurance companies, and it was also made applicable to the taxes of the year 1927.

Before I overlook it I want to say that there has been some claim that the rates on corporations should substantially correspond to the rates on individuals. I think this is a great mistake. Corporations have always been regarded as proper subjects of taxation on account of the peculiar advantages which are given them in their creation. Among the privileges granted a corporation first, no personal liability to the stockholders, second, that the transfer of property in a corporation is easily effected by the transfer of shares, and, lastly, there is a special advantage in the corporate form which has seldom been considered. It consists in the fact that these two first privileges I have mentioned which are peculiar to corporations creates the additional advantage of being capable of attracting large accumulations of capital. People are far more ready to invest their money in a corporation than they are in a copartnership, where they are liable to become responsible for all of the debts of the concern. In this way corporations like the steel trust or the automobile corporations, and like others that I could mention, have been built up with immense advantages, owing to the great amount of capital they have been able to attract. This in my judgment constitutes a special feature which makes it hard to say just where the corporation tax should stop or even where it should begin.

In this connection I might say that the corporation tax is especially burdensome to small corporations. There is no question but that the stockholders of small corporations are more heavily burdened by taxation than they would be if they were doing business as individuals or in the form of a copartnership. The committee took this into consideration, but it is difficult to get an agreement as to just how relief should be granted.

A proposal was made by the Treasury with reference to corporations which comprised only 10 members. The committee did not think this would give relief to a very large number of small corporations, meaning by the term "small corporations" corporations that had small profits that were equally entitled to relief as well as those with a smaller number of members. Finally it agreed to give an additional $1,000 of exemption to corporations which had an income of less than $25,000. This may seem small, but take a corporation whose net income after paying all expenses, including the salaries of officers, is only $10,000. It would reduce their tax 12½ per cent, and in a corresponding sum, according to the amount of profit, up to $25,000.

Some question has been raised as to why the corporation tax is made applicable to incomes of this year, 1927, and payable in the year 1928. We incorporated this provision in the bill, following provisions which we had made in a previous bill with reference to individual income taxes, and I think the same reason applies. I do not care to go into a discussion of that at any length at this time, but will say this, that the sole and only reason given at the hearings for making the reduction applicable to the taxes of 1927, payable in 1928, indeed the sole and only reason given for reducing the corporation tax at all, was because this tax bore on the stockholders, and yet the claim is made that the reduction ought not to be given to the income for 1927 because the tax has been passed on to the public. It is perfectly obvious to all Members of the House that the tax can not be both passed on to the general public and also bear on the stockholders; I might also say there is a large number of corporations which everyone will agree can not pass on the tax, such as corporations publishing newspapers, which are obliged to keep an almost invariable rate, at least a rate not influenced by taxation, no matter what the tax may be. Besides these, there are mining corporations producing lead, copper, silver, gold, and other metals, whose value is always determined by the general market price.

Then there are all of those corporations whose products are sold under competitive conditions or where the price is fixed by a public exchange, and small corporations generally. They are absolutely unable to pass on the tax as nearly everyone will agree. In fact, the economists generally agree that a tax can not be passed on by any corporation except a monopoly, other than in exceptional cases, and that corporations, like individuals and partnerships, sell for the highest price they can obtain consistent with the broadest market where it will bring the most profit, regardless of the tax. This question has been recently investigated by an English commission, which reached a conclusion in accord with the view just stated. The national conference board some years ago in one of its reports made similar statements. It has recently been making a more elaborate investigation and I understand its experts have reached the same conclusion. If corporations could fix the price to suit themselves there would be no occasion for losing money. Yet the facts are that 41 per cent in 1925 actually operated at a loss. And an additional 51 per cent made a profit of less than $25,000. Over 90 per cent of our corporate revenue comes from only 8 per cent of the corporations operated. The fact is a very considerable proportion of the sales by manufacturing companies are made at a loss, and a still larger proportion at a small profit. The trend of profits follows the trend of prices.

So much at this time for the corporation tax. We have made no change whatever in the individual income tax. The Treasury suggested we make changes in what is called the intermediate surtax brackets. The committee finally concluded to make no change in this respect for the reason that the matter had been gone over very carefully in the last revenue bill.

As originally proposed in the House the last bill had what might be called a bend in the line of surtax rates which did not correspond to the general graduation of those rates. Afterwards when the bill went to the Senate a change was made that this break in the curve might be corrected, and this change was in the intermediate surtax brackets. The committee believed that the surtax as now adjusted is fair and equitable.

There was another matter upon which the committee has given much consideration which has never before directly occupied its attention. It related to a simplification of the law. Members will remember in the last bill there was a provision for the creation of a joint committee of the House and Senate on internal revenue taxation. The duties of this committee were, speaking in a general way, two. First in the investigation of the operations of the law, and second the simplification of the income tax. This joint committee has been working at various times since it has been fully organized. There was some delay in the organization of this committee owing to the fact the House and Senate could not agree upon a chairman. Eventually they finally concluded that the chairmanship belonged to the House, and the Member now addressing you was made chairman of that committee. [Applause.] The work of the committee was divided into two divisions. One division, called the division of investigation, and the other, the division of simplification. The first-named division has been at work for more than a year. The latter was not organized until last spring for various reasons, owing to the difficulty of getting the proper personnel. The division of simplification has worked all summer, and together with this division a number of distinguished experts, lawyers, and economists, have collaborated without receiving any compensation for their services. A committee was thus formed, called the advisory committee, which submitted a report to the joint committee. The greater part of this report was approved by the joint committee in a report to the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee of the Senate.

I would recommend to Members who wish to delve in the difficulties of the income tax that they read the report of this joint committee sometime when they have time to consider it. As I have said, the joint committee recommended certain recommendations of the advisory committee be incorporated into the law; that is, they made that recommendation to the Ways and Means Committee. The Ways and Means Committee did not adopt all the recommendations of the joint committee, but they adopted a greater portion, and they are now found in the bill.

Among those recommendations of the joint committee which were adopted was one in regard to the rearrangement of the law, and I want to call especial attention to the Members of the committee to the form of the rearrangement. The bill in this respect differs very materially from bills heretofore introduced in 1918, 1921, 1924, and 1926. Each of those former acts reenacted all the provisions of the preceding acts which were intended to be preserved together with such changes and omissions as were made by new laws, and then repealed the preceding act with certain exceptions.

Now, this method resulted in the greatest complication, and it resulted also in a continual extension of our law. The law was getting longer every year, and more complicated, as the result of this plan. Every time you wished to turn to a certain provision in the law you found there not only provision for the year for which you were going to compute the income, but provisions relating to back years, from 1916 clear on to the time the bill was enacted. If this process is continued with each new bill, our revenue act will continue to be longer and their complexities will be continued. The committee thought we ought to make a fresh start. Under the new plan the taxpayers in 1927 and succeeding years will not be compelled to wade through the many complexities of prior acts. Now you will have before you, in looking at this bill, the provisions of the income tax for only the taxable year 1927 and succeeding years, which will have no effect on taxes imposed in prior fiscal years.

The income tax title of the 1926 act is not repealed by the bill and remains in force for the collection of taxes for 1925 and 1926, as well as taxes under prior acts, except as modified by Title III of the present bill, containing express amendments to such title, and by Title IV, containing various administrative provisions, and by Title V, containing a few retroactive provisions intended to relieve certain cases of hardship under prior acts.

The estate tax title of the 1926 act is neither repeated nor repealed in the present bill, which, in Title II (Sec. 401–403) contains three amendments to that title. Similarly the reductions recommended by the bill in the automobile, admissions, club dues, and stamp taxes are accomplished by express amendments to the 1926 act, instead of the old method of repetition and repeal. The adoption of the new method in the bill will, it is believed, materially save time in the House, inasmuch as the bill is 50 pages shorter than the bill in 1926, even though the new style of printing, on account of the headings and indentions, increases the number of lines necessary to embody any given number of words.

The second matter concerning the structure of the bill to which I desire to refer is the fact that it embodies a proposed new arrangement for the income tax title. The income tax title of the 1926 act, which follows closely the arrangement of the acts of 1918, 1921, and 1924, is the result of a gradual growth and accretion, with the result that the ordinary taxpayer has great difficulty in finding the matters of interest to him among the great mass of complicated provisions relating to special classes of taxpayers or to peculiar and exceptional circumstances. The committee has endeavored to simplify the income tax by distributing it to two main parts—general provisions and supplemental provisions—prefaced by a few introductory provisions.

The general provisions are those which apply to the ordinary transactions of the ordinary class of taxpayers. It is believed that approximately 80 per cent of the taxpayers who file returns under the new act will find in the general provisions practically all the information necessary for them to make out their returns.

The supplemental provisions comprise all provisions of the income tax title other than the general provisions and the introductory provisions. In the main, the supplemental provisions are those which apply only to extraordinary classes of taxpayers or which apply only to the extraordinary transactions of ordinary classes of taxpayers. The provisions are so arranged, it is believed, that the taxpayer may safely rely on making out his return on the basis of the general provisions without reading further, unless he is led to another portion of the bill by a cross reference.

Coming to the particular arrangement chosen for the general provisions, it is apparent that no one arrangement will be satisfactory to all. No two men probably would ever agree to what is the best arrangement. After considering the matter it seemed that the arrangement most likely to be convenient to the taxpayer is that adopted in the bill. It starts out, after a few introductory provisions, by imposing in section 11 a normal tax equal to a certain percentage "of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income." After the section imposing the taxes on individuals and corporations, is section 21 defining "net income" as meaning the gross income less the deductions. The next section (sec. 22) tells what the gross income is, and the next section (sec. 23) tells what the deductions are, followed by section 24, which tells him specifically the things he can not deduct. The taxpayer now having found what his net income is, next desires to know what are the credits against net income which are referred to in the section imposing the tax. So he finds in the very next section (sec. 25) a statement of these credits—personal exemption, credit for dependents, and so forth.

The taxpayer has now computed his tax and the next part of the bill (secs. 31–34) tells him what are his credits against the tax, most important of which is the earned income credit in section 31. The bill next contains Part IV (secs. 41–48), containing provisions relating to the accounting period and methods of accounting on the basis of which net income is computed. Strict logic might require these sections to be injected into the midst of the section relating to the computation of gross income, but it seems to the committee more desirable to segregate these provisions, inasmuch as many of them are of importance in a relatively smaller number of cases.

The next question is, How is the tax returned and when is it paid? These questions are answered by the bill in the sections immediately following (secs. 51–56).

The taxpayer has now completed his task and unless a deficiency is assessed against him in the future, he need never read any more of the bill.

The provisions just referred to which the ordinary taxpayer must examine are contained in less than 36 pages. In the case of the bill introduced in the House in 1926, the income tax title consisted of 140 pages, at least 113 of which the ordinary taxpayer was obliged to read in order to extract the provisions necessary for his information in computing his tax and making out his return.

This will explain some of the reasons and considerations upon which the committee acted in making up the form of the bill. Now I will come to some of the other particular provisions of the bill, and I desire to leave time, so that Members may propound such questions as they desire.

The earned income provision, which was incorporated in the bill of 1926, has occasioned many of the taxpayers and the collectors of taxes a great deal of difficulty. Some persons have found a great deal of trouble in computing their returns under it, and we have been informed by some of the collectors that about 50 per cent of the errors in the returns were made in computations under this provision.

The committee worked for a considerable time in endeavoring to simplify the provision. The joint committee recommended a provision in place of the one in the bill, but it was not entirely satisfactory to the committee, so the committee finally passed this over without adopting any change in it. It remains the same in the present bill as before. I had myself, in connection with some of the members of the staff of the joint committee and upon the suggestion of some other parties, suggested a method which I thought would greatly simplify this vexing provision, but, unfortunately, I was unable to bring it before the committee until it was too late for the committee to give it further consideration and the committee preferred to let the matter stand as it was.

As I have said I shall pass over the technical provisions except to answer questions which may be propounded to me by Members of the House with reference to them.

There are one or two matters which are contained in the bill concerning which I wish to speak briefly at this time and may, perhaps, speak again in relation to them. We made a provision providing for an increase in the salaries of certain higher officials of the Treasury Department. We did this because we found that in the last six years the personnel of the department in the upper divisions had almost entirely changed. The experienced men had withdrawn and gone into the commercial field where they could get better salaries. The turnover was immense. Men who received very small salaries were going before the Board of Tax Appeals and other courts against men who would get $50,000 and sometimes $100,000 out of a single case, cases that involved millions of dollars.

Mr. Nash, one of the head officials in the Treasury Department, who has this matter especially in hand, told us that the increases we have provided for would not require him, if they were preserved, to ask for any additional appropriations; that he would undertake to get along with fewer men if he could only keep the good men he had. The trouble was he could not keep them. I have been told that owing to the fact that these men have such an enormous number of cases to attend to—somewhere from 200 to 500 a month going up to the Board of Tax Appeals—they have been obliged to assign men who were inexperienced and did not have the necessary familiarity with the matter, with the result that in one case the Government probably lost somewhere from $300,000 to $500,000 because the case was not properly presented. So in the minds of the committee it appears it would be far cheaper to keep these good men and prevent this turnover.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman leaves that one subject will he yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman surely would not expect the Government to embark upon a policy of paying its officials salaries commensurate with the compensation that skillful attorneys receive who sit on the other side of the table from them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; and we have not—not a tenth part.

Mr. BLANTON. We have prosecuting attorneys on the other side of the table from attorneys who receive several hundred times as much compensation, and that has always been the fact existing in Government business.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. All the committee wants to do——

Mr. BLANTON. The Government can only expect its officials to do their duty based upon loyalty and nothing else—not upon compensation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It can not keep them where outside parties offer more. All the committee desired was that they be paid salaries which would keep men who were competent to handle the cases, and the commissioner believes if the provisions of the bill were granted it could be done.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Did the committee retain the provision which was put in the last revenue bill preventing ex-officials of the department from practicing before the department within two years after their resignations?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no change in this bill, so that would remain.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In a test case the Supreme Court recently handed down a decision fixing the statute of limitations as to the collection of claims, and I understand the Government will lose several millions of dollars under that decision. What was the cause of the delay in the department in fixing the tax in so many cases?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, I do not know definitely to what case the gentleman refers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The lighterage case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, that is taken care of in this bill. However, I will say this, that many of the delays in the department are caused far more by the taxpayers than they are by the Treasury itself. The taxpayers get additional time, and the Treasury Department officials took a different view of the law than the Supreme Court, I presume, believing that they would be safe.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In the meantime the statute of limitations ran.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So the Supreme Court held.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit, I would make the suggestion that if the gentleman from New York will get the document referred to by the chairman, the report of the advisory committee, or, rather the staff of the joint committee, he will find an admission on the part of the Treasury Department that they have been very inefficient in administering this, and I think that is one of the reasons we lost this money.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not disposed to agree with statements made by the gentleman from Texas generally, and in that particular case I certainly do not agree with him. I should have thought myself that the Treasury Department was correct in its construction of the law, but the Supreme Court held differently.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Did I understand the gentleman to say it is the intention of Mr. Nash to conduct his office now with fewer men in the event we pass the proposed increase in salaries?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He told the committee that he would ask no additional appropriation, and that if he could keep competent employees he could get along with fewer men.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It seems to me that would conflict with the statement made by the gentleman that some of these men have several hundred cases to attend to, which means that they must sometimes assign inexperienced men to handle some of the cases. I do not see how the gentleman is going to reconcile his two statements.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do you think if we have less competent men they will be able to dispose of as many cases as more competent men? Certainly not; if the older men down there—the men familiar with these matters and best able to deal with them—remain, they will dispose of more cases than if such men leave and new men have to be brought in. What Mr. Nash contended was that he was going to lose these experienced men unless the salaries were increased.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JONES. What limitation is placed in the law in reference to additional assessments on individuals in later years? For instance, up until the last two or three years there was no limitation on the time within which an additional assessment might be made by the Government when they reviewed a man's returns; and later I think they put on a limitation of three or four years. I think this was in the bill of last year or the year before. Is that provision retained in this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not entirely. There is a limitation of three years under the provisions of this bill applicable to the taxes from now on; and the old law stands as to prior taxes.

Mr. JONES. I will say in that connection that for some time there was a great deal of complaint on the part of taxpayers because they would make payment of their taxes and then some two or three years later some special representative would come along and assess additional taxes, and then maybe some other man would come along two or three years later and again assess additional taxes, and the taxpayer would never know when he was through paying his taxes for a specific year, because all of these three or four reviews would be of the same year.

An effort was made a time or two in the enactment of the law to provide that the taxpayer would some time or other know when he was through paying taxes; of course, in the absence of any fraud or deception.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He does now, and did under the last revenue bill. Three years is the limit under this bill, and as to former taxes, it stays the same that it was before.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the chairman that I have not had time to read all the provisions of the bill, and I have had a number of inquiries from my constituents who have written me and whose letters I found when I reached here upon the convening of Congress. I heard the gentleman state there was a reduction in the corporation taxes, and I want to ask if that was made applicable in this bill to 1927?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; applicable to the taxes of 1927 payable in 1928.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The people who wrote me desired that that should be done.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Does that apply to individual taxes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no change as to individual incomes, but we used the same principle in the last bill when we reduced the tax on individual incomes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I notice the bill reduces taxes on automobile chassis and bodies to 1½ per cent, and there is excepted from the law automobile truck chassis and bodies.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the same as the present law.

Mr. DENISON. We have removed the tax on all common carriers except automobile busses. Did the committee have that in mind, and did the committee intend to retain the tax on automobile busses alone among all the common carriers?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What the committee intended to do and did do was to cut the rate in half and leave the other provisions just as they were.

Mr. DENISON. So that now we only tax one common carrier and that is the automobile bus. We have removed the tax from all other common carriers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, that was done by the last bill.

Mr. DENISON. I was not raising the point as to when it was done, but I wanted to know if that was the intention of the committee originally, and if the committee still intends that it shall remain that way.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly, the committee intended that or it would not leave it that way in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Aside from the lowering of the percentage of the levy on corporations is any relief given to small corporations?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The only relief given to small corporations is to increase the exemption $1,000. This amounts to practically nothing to the large corporations, but does help the small corporations.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. There is no other relief, aside from that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And, of course, the lowering of the general tax, that is all.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. What was the attitude of the committee meeting the objection concerning the payments or collections on installment business? I have not been able to get quite clearly from your report how you met that proposition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not state it any better than it is stated in the report. It is an extremely technical provision, and if the gentleman will read the explanation in the report, I am sure he will understand it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Will the gentleman kindly give us the reason the committee did not follow the recommendations of the administration on the reduction of rates for the middle brackets?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The reason we did not do that was because we thought the proper line or curve of the gradation of the surtaxes is in the law now and that if we changed those rates in the middle brackets it would also affect those of the higher brackets, reducing the taxes on the higher incomes inevitably—that is, reduce the amount of taxes—although it does not reduce the rates above. On the whole the committee thought the rates ought to stand as they are.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Would it not have been more nearly just, perhaps, if the rates in the middle brackets had been heavier than those in the lower end of the brackets?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think so. I think we have a very good schedule there as it its. This is my opinion, and I think it is the view of a majority of the committee.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for one additional question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman state about the amount that would be involved if automobile busses were excepted as well as automobile trucks?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I can not give that, but it would not be very much.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. There seems to be some complaint on the part of savings banks and others with reference to the exemption permitted building and loan associations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman want to strike out that provision?

Mr. BURTNESS. No; but I want to ask the gentleman what was the appealing reason to the committee for retaining the provision and not granting similar reductions for interest that may be received where the funds are used for some other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We think that the building and loan associations are helpful to the people and induce them to deposit money.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the banks make money.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. While the building and loan associations are not for profit, but only pay expenses.

Mr. BURTNESS. Another question in reference to women's organizations and hospital and some other organizations who are very anxious to have an exemption for single persons raised so it will be half as much as the exemption for the married persons with only a wife and no dependents.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am inclined to think the gentleman can answer that question as well as I. I think he can tell whether the expenses of a married couple are not more than double the expenses of a single man.

Mr. BURTNESS. I did not entertain the notion that a single person ought to have an exemption that would amount to as much as married men, but I was in hopes that the committee would make it half as much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The question of the simplification of the law was one that I was very much interested in, because I have heard so much criticism on account of its complexity. I have read with interest an article by the gentleman who now has the floor in regard to the difficulties of the elimination of provisions simplifying the law.

I want to call attention to this result of the law that came under my observation. I do not know whether it is due to the incompetency of the employees in the field or due to the uncertainty of the law. Last summer in my district there were four different individuals who came to me complaining about the fact that some representative of the department had been to see them with reference to the reassessment of their income tax, and this individual made a change of his figures three or four different times; one day it was one set of figures, and another day another, and another another.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That was one of the cases where the salary paid was not sufficient to get a competent man, but I think there will not be so much trouble in the future, because the audit is better kept.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not know whether it was because the man was incompetent or whether it was due to the uncertainty of the law. It is unfortunate for the Government to send a representative who changed the amount three different times.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That will never be changed until we pay better salaries.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Section 104, dealing with the accumulation of surplus; does that provision in any way affect the situation where the earnings were used to pay stock dividends?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is nothing in the bill affecting stock dividends.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have not been able to get the hearings, as they are not printed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; they are printed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They are not available.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are available to Members.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is there any change made in this bill from the bill passed three years ago, with reference to the exemption of married men?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nothing whatever.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Was there any evidence before the committee in relation to it? Does not the gentleman think that an exemption of a married man with a family ought to be raised to $5,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the exemptions are quite large enough now. I think we have provided liberally for married men.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Was there any evidence before the committee regarding the exemption for married men and raising that exemption in order that they may live and support their families?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Two million three hundred thousand taxpayers were taken off of the list by increased exemptions in the present law. We have got the law now so that a very small proportion of our total population pays any income tax whatever.

Mr. HUDSPETH. A married man has an exemption of $3,500, but owing to the high cost of living and the other expenses he is obliged to submit to, does not the gentleman think the exemption should be raised to $5,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A poor man pays no tax.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Well, but the man who pays the tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Up to $5,000 a married man does not pay a tax that amounts to anything.

Mr. HUDSPETH. He does over $3,500. He has an exemption of only $3,500.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but it is very little that he pays.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Can the gentleman state what proportion of the total population paid individual income taxes? He just mentioned a moment ago that a very small proportion of the population pay income taxes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not give the gentleman the figures offhand. I will get them later on.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think it would be interesting to know.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, is this bill designed to consume all of the surplus predicted for the end of this year and the next?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. It is hoped that this bill will not consume all of the surplus. So far as the surplus for this fiscal year is concerned, we will have quite a large amount at the end of it for the reason that less than half of the reductions apply to this fiscal year. Consequently we will have quite a large surplus for the fiscal year 1928. There is no way of avoiding that.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. How is that to be used?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That will be applied toward extinguishment of the national debt. For 1929 there will be some surplus, but the provisions of the bill do not in any way include anything for extraordinary expenses, like flood control, Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, farm relief, new cruisers, and all sorts of things that I might mention, some of which will probably be granted considerable appropriations. We had to leave a margin for those matters.

Mr. PEERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. Has any change been made with reference to taxing the surplus of corporations allowed to accumulate beyond the reasonable need of the corporation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We undertake to reach that by a new provision in the bill, which I shall explain especially when we get to that part of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Was there any change made in the law with reference to exemption from income tax for mutual benefit associations—that is, community affairs—where they assess in case of death, just so much?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no change in that respect; no, sir.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now arise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Some time ago the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked unanimous consent that House bill No. 1 be printed in the RECORD. Since then the Chair has been informed by the Public Printer that it would be physically impossible not only on account of the size of the bill, but the type in which it is printed to print it in the RECORD. The Chair has spoken to the gentleman from Texas about it, and he is willing to have the proceedings vacated.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings with reference to printing the bill in the RECORD be vacated.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. FREE, a Representative from the eighth district of California, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath prescribed by law.

REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] if we can not agree upon a limitation of general debate. I have not had many requests for time.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let us close general debate to-morrow.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to the bill, that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and myself and that general debate be closed not later than the close of the session to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate on the House bill No. 1 be confined to the bill, that the time be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and that debate shall be concluded when the House adjourns to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question for my own information. I have no objection to vacating the order to print the revenue bill in the RECORD. It is a long bill, and I understood that one reason was on account of the type that it is printed in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was informed that it was not in the usual type that these bills are printed in and that it would be impossible to get it on the linotype machine?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The titles and subtitles are totally different.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I merely wanted it printed in the RECORD so that the people of the country could read it so that it could go into the different congressional districts.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD upon an amendment that I propose to offer to the pending revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, at the proper place, when the revenue bill is under consideration, I propose to offer an amendment in the following manner.

On page 26, after line 11, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(r) Medical, surgical, hospital, or funeral expenses: The actual and necessary expenses paid by the head of a family for himself or for any dependent member of the family, including only spouse or children, for medical, surgical, hospital, or funeral services, not exceeding $1,000 for any individual person in any separate tax year, all such payments to be allowed and deducted only at the usual and ordinary rates in such cases; and the commissioner is empowered to judge as to the reasonableness of any such charges under the facts and circumstances of particular cases.

This same idea has been advanced by me during the consideration of the two preceding revenue bills, and my conviction of its justice and righteousness has increased with the passage of time and with further reflection and consideration.

My efforts along this line were called to the attention of the South Carolina Medical Society by Dr. J. W. Jervey, an eminent physician, of Greenville, S. C., and that body, during its last meeting, heartily indorsed the proposal. Thereafter the same thought was brought to the attention of the American Medical Association by Dr. E. A. Hines, of Seneca, S. C., and that body at its session in May, 1927, at Washington, D. C., took the following action:

PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION HELD AT WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 16–20, 1927

(From page 38 or 527)

Resolutions on income-tax exemptions

Dr. E. A. Hines, South Carolina, read the following resolutions, which were referred to the reference committee on miscellaneous business:

"Whereas when the last two revenue bills were pending in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress two years ago and four years ago, respectively, Hon. J. J. McSWAIN, of South Carolina, offered amendments providing and stipulating that any taxpayer should be privileged to deduct from his income his expenses for himself and family incurred from medical treatment, surgical operations, and hospital and funeral expenses, and medical treatment to include professional service, nurse hire, and drugs; and

"Whereas the reason for this exemption is stronger than the present exemption permitted for losses by fire and storm, and the breaking and wearing out of machinery and bad debts, inasmuch as the human body is the greatest factor in the earning of income, and the expense of keeping it in good order, and of correcting disorder should, in good conscience and sound logic, be legally deductible; and

"Whereas the only argument made against the amendment was that it might lead to fraud on the Government, though the same argument could be made as against all deductions now allowed even with greater force, for no man could falsify his return by claiming that he had an operation or a death in his family, and even a claim of medical services, including drugs and nurse hire, could be so easily checked that fraud would be impossible: Now it is

"Resolved, That the South Carolina Medical Association by its house of delegates in convention assembled does hereby memorialize and pray the house of delegates of the American Medical Association to adopt resolutions indorsing this proposed amendment to the United States revenue bill relating to income taxes and to take immediate steps to invoke the interest and indorsement of every constituent State medical association for this important movement, urging each such association, and through it each county association, to adopt strong resolutions of indorsement and to advise its respective State Congressmen of its action: And be it further

"Resolved, That the delegates from the South Carolina Medical Association to the American Medical Association are hereby instructed to present the preamble and resolutions to the house of delegates of the American Medical Association at its coming meeting in Washington, D. C., and to make every effort to have inaugurated and prosecuted the suggested movement for the attainment of the ends hereinbefore set forth."

Report of reference committee on miscellaneous business. (Taken from page 52)

SEC. 3. Your committee feels that the preamble and resolutions introduced by Dr. E. A. Hines, South Carolina, with respect to income-tax exemptions, is of sufficient importance to warrant careful and favorable consideration by the Board of Trustees of the American Medical Association, and it recommends that the board of trustees transmit these resolutions to the constituent State associations for action. (38.)

Respectively submitted,

ALBERT SOILAND, Chairman.
T. O. FREEMAN.
S. M. BLACKSHEAR.
D. E. SULLIVAN.
CHARLES O'DONOVAN.

On motion of Doctor Soiland, duly seconded and carried, section 3 of the report, recommending that the resolutions on income-tax exemptions introduced by Dr. E. A. Hines, South Carolina, be referred to the board of trustees, was adopted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on account of my health, being confined in a hospital, I was unable to come to Washington before the beginning of the session of Congress, and, therefore, unable to appear before the Committee on Ways and Means while it had under consideration the pending revenue bill. When the amendment heretofore offered along this line and under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the opposition to the amendment was based upon the statement that the provision would be impracticable and unworkable and would lead to fraud and to the causing of additional expense in the collection of taxes. I do not recall to have ever heard any argument in opposition to the merits of the proposition. Accordingly, on December 7, 1927, I sent a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking him to express an opinion as to the workability and practicability of such a provision in the law, if enacted by Congress.

I asked the Secretary for an immediate reply, assuming that it was a very small proposition and that he could immediately detail two or three experts to go over the proposition and that they could come to a conclusion in a very short while and could write up their conclusions and send them to me by a messenger, so that I could have received the answer by this time. I regret to say that I have yet received no answer from the Secretary of the Treasury, and think that the proposition is more complex and difficult than I had assumed. I here insert the letter for the information of the House:

DECEMBER 7, 1927.

Hon. ANDREW W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Please be advised that I propose to offer as an amendment to the pending revenue bill the inclosed typewritten matter.

I wish to ask you to advise me immediately—the very day that you receive this letter if possible—if, in your opinion, there is any unusual and special difficulty in the administration of such a provision. I am not asking your opinion as the advisability or justice or merit of the proposal. I am merely asking for your expert opinion as to its workability and practicability.

It seems to me, I respectively submit, that it is susceptible of very much easier administration than such provisions as business expenses, business losses, bad debts, depreciation in value, depletion of mineral deposits, and expenses in case of casual sales of real estate. There are elements of uncertainty and difficulty of proof in the particulars just mentioned.

But in the case of the proposed deduction for medical, surgical, hospital, or funeral services it is only a matter of producing a receipt to show that the money was paid. In order to prevent unreasonable charges, it is provided that the charges must be the usual and ordinary rates, and the commissioner is empowered to decide the facts of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any charge under the facts and circumstances of any particular case. This will prevent anything like collusion between the taxpayer and the physician, surgeon, hospital, or mortician. Of course, if there should be such a case of collusion, it is made a criminal offense and penalized accordingly under the general provisions of the law, constituting a conspiracy to defraud the Government.

I therefore respectively submit that from the point of view of administration the proposal is workable. I am respectfully asking your opinion, and should your opinion differ from mine I shall be very glad for you to state the reasons for your conclusions.

Again respectfully requesting an immediate reply, as the bill is now under consideration, I am,

Yours very respectfully,

J. J. McSWAIN.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 10, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

190. A letter from the chairman of Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting the forty-first annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and Expenditures.

191. A letter from the office of the Postmaster General, transmitting report of inspectors who investigated the burglary of the post office at Kearney, Nebr., and the claim of the acting postmaster for credit on account of loss sustained by such robbery, September 23, 1926, in the sum of $17,204.83; to the Committee on Claims.

192. A letter from the office of the Postmaster General, transmitting report of inspectors who investigated the burglary of the post office at Pawtucket, R. I., on February 1, 1926, and the claim of the postmaster for credit on account of loss sustained in the sum of $225.231.86; to the Committee on Claims.

193. A letter from the office of the Postmaster General, transmitting report of inspectors who investigated the burglary of the post office at Fort Collins, Colo., and the claim of the postmaster on account of loss sustained by the robbery, July 24, 1927, in the sum of $34,934.90; to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4821) granting a pension to Sarah G. Graveline, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHMANN: A bill (H. R. 6658) to amend an act entitled, "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting the salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 6659) to amend the immigration act of 1924; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6660) to amend subdivision (c) of section 4 of the immigration act of 1924; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6661) to amend subdivision A of section 4 of the immigration act of 1924; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6662) to amend certain sections of the immigration act of 1924; to the committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 6663) to regulate exhibition flights by the Air Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 6664) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6665) to regulate appointments and promotions in the municipal government of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 6666) to increase the minimum salary of deputy United States marshals to $2,000 per annum; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 6667) to repeal the so-called flexible tariff provision; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 6668) authorizing appropriations for construction of a highway in the Hawaiian Islands; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KIESS: A bill (H. R. 6669) fixing the salary of the Public Printer and the Deputy Public Printer; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LINDSAY: A bill (H. R. 6670) to tender the thanks and appreciation of the Congress of the United States for heroic service rendered by the officers and crews of the steamships President Roosevelt, President Harding, American Trader, Republic, and Cameronia; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6671) to create a board of industrial adjustments and to define its powers and duties; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6672) to permit certain aliens to proceed to the United States when annual quota for certain groups has not been exhausted in year immediately preceding; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6673) to amend the United States Judicial Code and to prescribe a penalty for encroaching on or restricting the constitutional right of freedom of worship or religious belief or conviction of faith; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6674) to amend the national prohibition act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6675) to provide commutation of transportation on common carriers for certain persons traveling thereon for the sole purpose of visiting war veterans in hospitals, sanitariums, or similar institutions; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Also, a bill (H. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, December 10, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thy presence, O God, is meant to enrich and beautify all life. We praise Thee that the light of Thy Providence folds us in its sure embrace. Thy power is all about us. We breathe Thy air, we are warmed by Thy sun, we are awed by Thy glory, and we are kept by Thy daily care. We recall memories which we can not define and satisfactions which we can not analyze; yet we bless Thee. Clothed with the insignia of a great responsibility, God forbid that we should be untrue to our best selves. If greed and injustice exist, may it be said that they exist in defiance of our cherished principles. By fortitude, by patience, by a conscientious devotion to our country's welfare, help us to discharge the supreme claims which are upon us. Make our understanding a fortress safe and secure. Oh, may we give ourselves up to Thy wise and gentle guidance, through Christ.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RECESS

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we are honored to-day in having as a visitor in the Capitol a distinguished young American who has thrilled the world by a notable achievement. I refer to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. [Applause.] In order that the membership of the House may have the privilege of meeting Colonel Lindbergh, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Speaker, and that the Speaker appoint a committee of two to wait upon Colonel Lindbergh and escort him to the Hall of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. TILSON, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, to escort Colonel Lindbergh to the Hall of the House.

Accordingly, at 12 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess.

DURING THE RECESS

Mr. TILSON and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee escorted Colonel Lindbergh to the well of the House.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen and gentlewomen of the House, I have the extreme pleasure now of presenting to you America's most attractive citizen. [Prolonged applause.]

Colonel Lindbergh assumed a stand on the Speaker's rostrum, and the Members and officials of the House were presented to him by Mr. TILSON.

AFTER THE RECESS

At 12 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR FOR COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, there is only one more honor that this House can do to that lovable young man who has just been our guest, and that is at this time to pass the bill conferring upon him the Congressional Medal of Honor. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3190) authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, United States Army Air Corps Reserve, for displaying heroic courage and skill as a navigator, at the risk of his life, by his nonstop flight in his plane, the Spirit of St. Louis, from New York to Paris, France, on May 20, 1927, by which he not only achieved the greatest individual triumph of any American citizen but demonstrated that travel across the ocean by aircraft was possible.

The SPEAKER. The bill is passed. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate Resolution 36

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate Resolution 37

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. LADISLAS LAZARO, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate Resolution 38

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. M. E. CRUMPACKER, late a Representative from the State of Oregon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate Resolution 39

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM N. VAILE, late a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CRUMPACKER

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an article from the Boston Transcript of August 8, 1927, regarding my deceased colleague, the late Representative MAURICE EDGAR CRUMPACKER, of Portland, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following newspaper article from the Boston Transcript of August 8, 1927:

The sudden passing on of MAURICE EDGAR CRUMPACKER, of Portland, Oreg., Congressman, in late July, was a tragedy and a calamity. It was inexplicable to those who did not know the inside man. He was in his forty-first year. He had served one term in Congress. There his father had served before him, though from Indiana, where the family then lived. Hence the younger Crumpacker did not go to Washington as Congressman as a stranger. He knew the town. He was educated at the grade schools at Valparaiso, in Indiana, and the District of Columbia and at Culver. He was graduated from the University of Michigan. There he was a greater athlete than student. This is no reflection on his academic standing, for he is remembered there as one of its great figures on the gridiron. For wherever "Stub," so known because of his thick-knit build, saw virile life, there it was his nature to plunge in, head over heels. He was as much at home in a scrimmage as a young lawyer in an empty office, where the footprints of a client on the mat before the door provoke the same thrill as when Mr. R. Crusoe discovered the tracks of the savage, "Friday," upon his bathing beach.

CRUMPACKER was graduated at the Harvard Law School in 1912. He opened an office in Portland, Oreg. There his capacity was recognized. He was made special deputy district attorney. He was a captain in the World War. He was elected to Congress in 1924. His plurality was decisive. Even his neighbors voted for him. This is the last, hardest vote to win in a world which the Episcopal ritual intimates abounds in envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness. So do they vote for another Congressman, of Gloucester, in Massachusetts, a race of fishermen, who is a St. Andrew, preeminent for his big hauls at the polls. Likely CRUMPACKER would have gone to the Senate. A wife and three young sons survive him.

While the life of CRUMPACKER was short as measured in years, it was long as measured by substantial accomplishment. In Congress he was a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of which the noted Mr. DEMPSEY, of Lockport, N. Y., is chairman. The merits of the positions which CRUMPACKER pressed in Congress were augmented by his personal charm, when others in this way less gifted than he would have made less progress with them. While in an estimate of the man this substantial accomplishment is recognized, it is not emphasized. This is not only because there are others in Congress who stand up to this test, and so he is not unique, but it is also because he was in another way preeminent and alone and as such only to be understood.

CRUMPACKER qualifies for a New England weekly, first because of his three years' residence in Cambridge at the law school. Then he came to be known by men prominent thereabouts to-day. These he held in strong bonds. For to see him was to fancy him. On his part, he wound his tentacles around the hearts of those who crossed his path. To them his loss to-day is almost as one of their own kin. CRUMPACKER again qualifies in a New England weekly because of his appearance before the Middlesex Club in the spring of 1925. He was the oasis of that dinner to all, whether they looked for the solidity of foundation matter or for the lighter touch of the turrets. To do this was to do much, for at the Middlesex Club, since the days of Sam Powers, of versatility and wit, and of the student, Louis Arthur Coolidge, the best talent of the country has appeared. President Proctor, who has kept the pace, will tell you this of CRUMPACKER, whether you ask him or not. Then CRUMPACKER sat for me, my first Washington portrait. This I was asked to do because of that dinner. I remember his caution: "Don't make your vivid colors of me that of a comedy."

CRUMPACKER, besides his substantial qualifications, was an entertainer, not the product of artifice, but so born. It was unavoidable. Nevertheless, he was keenly sensitive to its political dangers, from the days it destroyed Sunset Cox and defeated Job Hedges for Governor of New York. So he put the entertainer in his proper place. So this never jeopardized his political position. And one who has the power of amusement and controls it is greater than he who taketh a city. This CRUMPACKER did, but cheer oozed out of his system and made very many people very happy. He was an adept at the piano, which augmented his efficacy as an entertainer. There his fingers reached out into the top octaves with the same facility as those of a child in a large family for the too scarce cream at breakfast. He did not dissipate his energies on fugues in B minor, such as satiate the pretended tastes of many at Symphony Hall, but he was human enough to cling to the stuff that cheers those who propose to be honestly happy. All remember, now with peculiar significance, his greatest song, a tonic to the tired, Rolling to the Sea. So far this is the story of CRUMPACKER as known to many men; that is, to those who thought they knew him. Now, the key to the inside CRUMPACKER.

The following anecdote may not have been heard by some one, somewhere, for some time. It seems to fit. A depressed man once sought an appointment with a neurologist. No one should do this who has not a fair control of his trouble, for this branch of the profession, as yet, sails in seas pretty much uncharted. "I can not give you an appointment this side of a week," his secretary said. "I can wait a month," the sufferer replied. The secretary marveled at his patience. The sufferer continued: "Yours is a 10-year cure, I know, if at all. With an annual salary, a month looks small." When they met, the neurologist, after some sparring, said, "Why not read Jones; he is a great spreader of cheer?" "I am Jones," said the sufferer. The neurologist finds his hayfields often among those who entertain others. This is the key to the inside CRUMPACKER.

CRUMPACKER was looked upon by most men at the risk of the tenth commandment. This is an often and easy mistake in the contrasts of life, when men forget that they see only the show side of those whom they think more fortunate than themselves. For could those who people the streets be seen as they are, then would walk there often not men and women but heroes and heroines. The only sure test of anyone is to see him in his own house, alone with his own family, where only is he himself. There he is often an extra tire, though he may be the life of the clubhouse. There, on the other hand, he may be vital to happiness, though an unsought hermit in public places. The home life of CRUMPACKER could not have been more sympathetic—they with him, he with them.

CRUMPACKER was apparently a synonym of life worth while. He was, in fact, a productive member of the community. He was beyond money cares. He had, apparently, health, and was apparently the first man made without a nervous system. To get to the essence of the man as he appeared to the bleachers of life, it is a temperate statement that there has been no man in Congress who has added more to its cheer, and it was apparently automatic and not the product of a forced draft. Civilization is under a great, too often forgotten obligation to this class, for the ponderous too often precede in the distribution of its prizes. Such men as CRUMPACKER lift men out of the shadowed valleys of discouragement in which life abounds up onto the mountains of hope, sunlit by their cheer. This is seen in the city of Worcester in that brilliant raconteur, Mr. William Bacon Scofield, to the discriminating its most vital citizen. There was no man in Congress more sought by the most sought for than CRUMPACKER, by such men as LONGWORTH; ROBERT BACON, a brother of Jamaica Plain's own pride, Gaspar Bacon; and RICHARD ALDRICH, a son of former Senator Nelson W. Aldrich. With these men he often played golf or walked in Rock Creek Park on Sunday. He was the axis about which his associates revolved.

CRUMPACKER was, apparently, the concentrated essence of vigor and vivacity, whether in hours of avocation, in "shorts," or in the lobby of the House. This is, however, a high-priced commodity to those who have it in the market of life. This price CRUMPACKER paid. He went to bed a debtor to his nervous system. His nervous account was overdrawn. While he sowed cheer, like many others, he reaped little in his last years. His deposits were scarce, for he gave more than he got, because of his disability. By the law of averages and the swinging of the pendulum, as those who knew tell us, the heights which he attained in the spreading of cheer when spurred by society he paid for in the depths which he reached when alone with himself. It was the same way with Lincoln, whose sense of humor, however, carried his load, where that of CRUMPACKER could not because of the burden. The growing trouble which he had long mastered then mastered him. At the end, his last Sunday, he knew not what he was or where he was, and so he died as irresponsible and innocent, in the manner of his death, as though from the disabilities of old age.

Of such was CRUMPACKER. In him the House has lost not only a Member of performance, who did much in his first term, and of promise, but also one who as a spur to the spirit of its Members is unsurpassed in its history. This is a too scarce quality in days when accomplishment is happily almost commonplace. CRUMPACKER loved life. Life loved CRUMPACKER. In him life and death were never set off in contrast more sharp. He will live among his associates more vividly than many who remain. He died, and a host long will mourn him. It is a wise man who sets his heart not on health, wealth, or fame but on affection. This CRUMPACKER had. This he reciprocated at home and abroad. Requiescat!

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD—AUTOMOBILES FOR THE NAVY

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes, in order to make a correction in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, some one has introduced a bill, and has signed my name to it, which, if enacted into law, would allow the Secretary of the Navy to buy for every officer of the Navy, a Cadillac, a Packard, or a Rolls-Royce automobile. Everyone knows that such an idea is foreign to that which would be expressed by me. I do not know who did this. I do not know where it came from. I never saw the bill before.

Mr. SNELL. Does it include Members of the House?

Mr. McCLINTIC. It refers only to the Navy. I feel that it is only due to myself to make the RECORD clear, so that in the future some one may not rise on some public platform and say of me: "Look here, he has introduced a bill that absolutely will teach the naval officers how to navigate automobiles rather than ships." [Laughter and applause.]

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that some of the naval officers ought to learn a little more about navigating ships. We all remember out on the California coast that $11,000,000 worth of vessels was destroyed because of bad operation, and down at Melbourne, Australia, a little over three years ago, in perfectly smooth water, a naval officer ran a destroyer into a fishing smack and sunk it. If I could have my way I would cause all of our destroyers to be taken out of their berths for 30 days each year in order to teach the naval officers how to operate them, rather than to give them automobiles, as this bill would do.

I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected so as to show that I did not introduce this piece of legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why not ask unanimous consent that the bill be withdrawn?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I thank my colleague for the suggestion, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be withdrawn, so that if the real author wants to introduce such legislation he may do it in his own name.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be withdrawn. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on the question of the privileges of the Whole House a matter of that great importance ought not to stop with merely the denial by the gentleman from Oklahoma that he introduced any such bill. If somebody put in the hopper in the name of the gentleman from Oklahoma a bill without authority, the House ought to know something more about it, in my judgment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order——

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I will be satisfied with the granting of my request.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if the gentleman is satisfied I am.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in pursuance of the order entered by the House yesterday, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, before beginning the remarks I have planned upon the reductions in taxes and revenue in the pending bill, the reasons therefor and the limit to be placed upon the diminution of revenue, I will refer to some remarks made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who had the floor last evening, lest from the general course of his remarks the impression might have been left upon the House that the Committee on Ways and Means in preparing and reporting the pending bill had been under the domination of the Treasury. It is important that the Treasury present its views, for the information and experience it has gained from the administration of the revenue laws, its contact with taxpayers, and the discovery of needed amendments make its conclusions and recommendations of the first importance. The public interest is represented by its experienced officials. But to the House is committed the responsibility of proposing revenue legislation, and it is our duty and responsibility, after due consideration, as representatives of the people who are taxed, to determine the policies to be pursued, the objects to be taxed, and the rates of such taxation. The committee gave the views of the Treasury careful and extended consideration. In matters of taxation the committee differed from the Treasury. The Treasury recommended a reduction of the corporation tax to 12 per cent. The committee cut the tax to 11½—a change in the recommendation. They recommended that corporations having $25,000 or less capital stock and not more than 10 stockholders should be allowed to report as individuals or partnerships. The committee rejected that. They also had a plan for the rearrangement of the so-called intermediate brackets of the surtax. We disagreed. They proposed an elimination of the estate tax. The committee retains the present law. They proposed the elimination of certain taxes on acceptances. We agreed with them on that. They proposed no reduction in the stamp tax. We propose to reduce the tax on the sale or transfer of capital stock from 2 cents to 1 cent, and to repeal the tax on sales on produce on exchanges. They proposed no reduction on admission and dues. We cut them in half. They proposed no reduction on automobiles. We cut that tax in half. That is, the committee after full and comprehensive consideration of the information presented from all sources on the conditions of trade and business reached its own conclusion and make in the pending bill a report of legislation and adjustment of revenue in accordance with what it believed from the testimony and all the evidence available and from its former knowledge was to the best interests of the country and of the taxpayers. These reductions in revenue——

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will.

Mr. CRISP. I think the gentleman inadvertently made an incorrect statement relative to the tax on admissions. We did not cut it in half, but increased the exemptions from 75 cents to $1.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thank the gentleman for the correction. This item is estimated to earn for the Treasury $18,000,000 in 1928 and 1929. We raised the exemption on tickets, so that a ticket costing $1 or less will not be taxed. This will cause an estimated loss of revenue of $8,000,000—not quite one half. In order to ascertain how much the corporation tax should be reduced we took the estimates for the coming year 1928 and 1929 and found that on that basis each 1 per cent of the 13½ per cent of the tax was about $83,000,000 in taxes a year. We saw our way clear to reduce that tax 2 per cent, making it 11½ per cent. It reduced the corporation tax on that item $164,600,000. The Treasury had recommended relief for the smaller corporations and especially those coming in competition with individuals and partnerships. The committee rejected the Treasury recommendation, but raised the credit for the small corporations having $25,000 or less of annual income from $2,000 to $3,000. That accounts for another reduction of $12,000,000, making the total for corporations $176,600,000.

In addition to what was said by the chairman yesterday in defense of this action, I refer to three items. As to the corporations of the country, out of the 27,000,000 people who obtain their living by employment other than that of their own business, from 16,000,000 to 18,000,000 obtain it from employment arising out of corporate activities, and so any reduction in the burdens on the corporations that will promote their welfare will also directly and indirectly aid two-thirds of the wage earners of the United States.

There are 3,000,000 stockholders in the corporations of the country, and these 3,000,000 stockholders pay now 13½ per cent on part or all the money they receive as dividends from the corporations. It is paid before they get the dividends.

If a widow has an income of $1,000 from dividends received from a corporation, and that is her sole income, before she receives it $135 is deducted from it under the present law, and there will be $115 deducted from it under the pending bill; that is, that amount of tax is collectible on that amount of money distributed as dividends. A person having an income of $1,000 from other sources and having no other income pays no tax.

Furthermore, there are only 2,500,000 individual taxpayers left on the tax rolls who pay tax, and their average tax is only 4.2 per cent, and only 9,000 of them out of the 2,500,000 pay taxes equal to the corporation tax, and only then when their income is $110,000 or more. So manifestly an injustice has been done to business done in corporate form. We are attempting now to go part way in relieving or adjusting that inequitable distribution of the burden of taxation.

The next reduction was $8,000,000 on admissions and $5,000,000 on dues. Tickets costing $1 or less are to be tax free, while in existing law such exemption applies to tickets costing not to exceed 75 cents. This will take care of persons of ordinary means. They can get seats in the theaters or moving-picture houses where in some part of the house they can see any kind of performance that is put on the boards. Dues or fees not exceeding $10 per year are exempt from tax.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. In the matter of corporation taxes, before you leave that point, can you explain why you could not follow the Treasury recommendation on that?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not the time just now; that will be discussed under the five-minute rule. It would take more time now than I have at my disposal to make an explanation of that.

We have cut the automobile tax, which is reduced from 3 per cent to 1½ per cent, by $33,000,000. We repeal the cereal-beverage tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent in the present law, since it was imposed in aid of prohibition enforcement, and it is not now needed for that purpose. We have imposed reduced rates in the wine taxes to the extent of $930,000 to place them on a parity with other similar products. On stamp taxes we have reduced the revenues by $11,800,000. This makes in all a reduction of $235,515,000.

In the working out of the administrative problem it was found that under the existing law, unless the tax is retained at the source, nonresident aliens and foreign corporations do not pay the amount of tax they ought to pay upon the sums which they receive, and an amendment is incorporated in the law requiring them to pay the amount intended that they should pay before the money leaves this country. If the money ever leaves the United States it is practically impossible to recover the tax. That involves an increase of $2,000,000 in the revenue.

We raise the tax on prize fights and such exhibitions to 25 per cent on admissions of $5 and over. This is not inteded to legalize prize fighting, but they exist under State law. They are the source of considerable revenue and there is no reason why the Government should not tax them as a distinct luxury.

We have increased the annual tax on yachts and foreign-built boats contracted for after December 1, 1927, by $30,000.

In all we recover back by these additional taxes $2,780,000, making a net reduction of revenue in the bill $232,735,000, or $7,735,000 more than the Treasury proposes.

I insert here a table showing these changes for convenience in study:

Estimated loss in revenue

(Changes proposed by the revenue act of 1928)

Reductions: Corporations—
Reduction in rate of tax—
Estimated revenue under present law: 13½ per cent on all corporations except insurance; 12½ per cent on these corporations		$1,120,000,000
Estimated revenue as proposed:
Insurance	$18,400,000
Other	937,000,000
		955,400,000
Loss		$164,600,000
Increased credit (from $2,000 to $3,000 on corporations with net income of $25,000 or less)		12,000,000
Total loss, corporations			$176,600,000
Admissions tax (increased exemption to $1 admission)			8,000,000
Dues tax (reduced from 10 to 5 per cent)			5,000,000
Automobile tax (reduced from 3 to 1½ per cent)			33,000,000
Cereal beverage tax (repealed)			185,000
Wine taxes (reduced rates)			930,000
Stamp taxes—
Sale or transfer of capital stock (reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent)		$8,800,000
Sales of produce on exchanges (repealed)		3,000,000
			11,800,000
Total			235,515,000
Increases:
Withholding of tax at source on tax-free covenant bonds (nonresident aliens and foreign corporations)		$2,000,000
Prize fights (tax of 25 per cent on admissions of $5 and over)		750,000
Foreign-built boats (increased annual tax on boats contracted for after Dec. 1, 1927)		30,000
Total			2,780,000
Net loss in revenue			232,735,000

Less than half of this loss will be felt in the fiscal year of 1928, ending June 30 of that year. Consequently there will be a large surplus for that fiscal year which under the law will be applied to the public debt.

Now, the question arises, Why did the committee limit the amount of reduction as it has done? It is reported that there will be a surplus of $635,000,000 for the fiscal year 1927. Then, that being so, why not reduce the taxes $450,000,000 or $500,000,000? I think we will all agree that the Government should live from regular and recurrent sources if there is to be any stability in business or a healthful development of enterprise. The sudden fluctuation caused by increasing taxes one year to meet an unexpected deficit in the Treasury and lowering them another year, with no regularity or certainty as to what the taxes will be, would be a great detriment to business. Consequently, in the Committee on Ways and Means ever since tax reduction bills have been reported it has always been held in mind that the tax reduction should not exceed the surplus revenue from regular sources except that wherever we knew that there would be great resources, such as from the sales of war supplies, which were held by the Treasury in hundreds of millions of dollars immediately after the war, or where there would be great income from excess-profits taxes of previous years which were due but had not been and could not be collected on account of questions involving examinations or suits at law extending over many years, and where there were other sources of unusual revenue of large amounts, we did make reductions, where such sources existed, in excess of the surplus from ordinary receipts. It was expected that reduced taxes would stimulate business and industry, increasing taxable amounts, and so increase the receipts of revenue, and this occurred. We knew we could dispose of the war material, the Federal farm-loan bonds that the Government bought in order to prevent the Farm Loan Board from issuing separate securities under a Government agency at the time a Liberty bond drive was on, and also other properties held by the Treasury. We also knew that the expenses of government were being reduced.

But these unusual resources are practically exhausted. We are now dependent for surpluses available for tax reduction on the excess of ordinary receipts over expenditures. Governmental expenses have practically become stabilized, with a tendency toward increase owing to unusual conditions in the country such as floods. But we have had in mind that these unusual resources are largely capital assets—the last I have mentioned are capital assets—and that as such they are the cause of a part of the public debt of the United States and upon realization should be used in reducing the public debt.

In the last five years we have reduced the debt $2,000,000,000 from surplus revenues of all kinds. Of this $2,000,000,000, $1,700,000,000 was from nonrecurrent sources, and out of current revenues from regular sources there has been used in the last five years only $300,000,000 in the reduction of the public debt. Also out of this $1,700,000,000 received from other than regular sources and applied to the debt no less than $900,000,000 came from the sale of capital assets.

This reduction of $2,000,000,000 in the public debt during the past five years has reduced the interest charge more than $80,000,000 annually. This saving in interest payments has been a material factor in the surpluses on which tax reductions are based.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Capital assets and not taxes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; capital assets but not taxes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman spoke on January 14 last, as I recall, with reference to the reasons why taxes should not be reduced, making the same character of argument he is now making. If the gentleman will refer to his remarks he will see he said that if the bill I proposed were enacted into law they would have a deficit of $185,000,000 in this fiscal year, while it appears from the statement of the Treasury Department there is $455,000,000 in the Treasury as a surplus.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will come to that directly. There are no more Federal farm-loan bonds in the possession of the Treasury. There is only $4,000,000 worth left of surplus war materials. There can not be collected from back taxes, on the average, after the refunds have been deducted, over $50,000,000 a year hereafter, approximately $50,000,000 a year. The railroad securities, which were of large amount, have now been reduced to only $49,000,000, and these are the securities of the weaker roads, having only problematical value, so that no one knows what those $49,000,000 face value of securities will finally sell for. Consequently, we are down to this point, the extraordinary, irregular sources of revenue are dried up and practically all gone. The only one of any amount is the amount to be received from back taxes, and as some taxes due in one year are not for various reasons collected until another year we have an average of $50,000,000 a year that may be counted as a regular source of revenue. Payments received from foreign governments are included in regular receipts in the amount of approximately $200,000,000 yearly.

The Treasury estimates the net revenue from regular, recurrent sources to be $137,000,000 for the year 1928 and $199,000,000 for 1929. I append a table on this subject for the information of the House.

Principal receipt items of a nonrecurring or temporary type increasing the surplus in the fiscal years 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928,[1] and 1929[1]

	1923	1924	1925	1926	1927	1928[1]	1929[1]
Back income and profits tax collections[2]	$300,000,000	$300,000,000	$276,000,000	$295,000,000	$331,000,000	$280,000,000	$180,000,000

[1] Estimated.
[2] Back income tax collections for fiscal years 1923 and 1924 are best available estimates. Figures of actual collections were not kept separate for those years.
[3] Excess payments.
[4] Exclusive of amount paid in Liberty bonds aggregating $5,500,000 principal amount.

For the fiscal year 1928 there will be revenues accruing before the reductions in this bill become effective which will provide for that year. But in 1929, with the unusual receipts, including back taxes, estimated at only $75,000,000, we have a different situation. The estimated excess of regular receipts are $199,000,000, to which may be added $50,000,000 of back taxes as a regular item. The surplus will be $249,000,000. There will be also $25,000,000 from irregular sources. The Bureau of the Budget, however, in its statement, made subsequent to the statement made by the Treasury, estimates that the amount of expenditures will be $22,000,000 more than the Treasury had contemplated. Consequently the surplus from regular sources will be $177,000,000, which, by adding $50,000,000 more, will make $227,000,000. So the proposed bill, with its $232,735,000 reduction, comes down pretty nearly to the line where the surplus will be exhausted. It is also necessary that there should be available an unobligated surplus. We practically exhaust in this reduction the surplus from regular sources of revenue. Future surpluses will depend upon the development of the country so increasing the taxable amounts and upon the increase of receipts from foreign governments.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked me how there came to be this large amount of money in the Treasury for this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentlemen have a copy of the report of the committee and will turn to page 8 [see table given above], they will find that for the year 1923, after deducting from the total surplus of revenue that from nonrecurrent or extraordinary sources, there was a deficit of $89,000,000; that is, if it had not been for these extraordinary sources of revenue the Government would have had a deficit of $89,000,000 that year. In 1924, after deducting receipts from extraordinary sources, the surplus was $169,000,000. In 1925, after deducting from the total surplus the amount of money received from the nonrecurrent sources, there was a deficit of $93,000,000—that is to say, the regular and recurrent sources were $93,000,000 less than the expenditures of that year. In 1926 the net surplus, subtracting from the total surplus the nonrecurrent receipts, was $162,000,000. In 1927 it was $221,000,000. In 1928 it was estimated there will only be $137,000,000, but we will have a surplus coming over from this year, as the chairman explained yesterday. In 1929 the Treasury estimates, after making these reductions, only $199,000,000 and the Bureau of the Budget estimates $177,000,000.

Now, a special drive was made by the Treasury to close up all the excess-profit tax years. They had been held up for a long period. They were unable to reach agreements, or reach settlements. Suits were pending. A special drive was made by the Treasury to collect the back taxes and bring the work up current, so that taxpayers would not have the right to complain that their cases were not promptly heard and promptly settled. As a result of that, in the year 1927, the amount obtained from nonrecurrent sources was $414,000,000, of which $214,000,000 was from back taxes—$331,000,000 collected less $117,000,000 refunds leaves a net of $214,000,000. After subtracting these unusual nonrecurrent receipts of $414,000,000 from the $635,000,000 total surplus, we have $224,000,000, practically the amount of the reduction proposed in the bill.

I am urging the House to consider, before it proposes to increase the amount of reduction, the fact that we are now down to the point where we do not have these adventitious receipts. We have disposed of them. We have paid them on the public debt, and every billion of dollars paid on the public debt is a saving of $40,000,000 a year to the taxpayers in interest, as that interest has to be paid out of taxes. Not one dollar of former surpluses has been wasted. Applied on the debt, they have directly aided in reducing the amount of taxes necessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury last year overestimated the receipts from taxes, and the only error there has been is in these nonrecurrent items.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I happen to have received this morning, as I think all the Members did, the daily statement of the United States Treasury for December 7, 1927. This shows that on that date the balance of cash on hand in the General Treasury of the United States was $23,878,282.62. So the surplus is not in the Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me call your attention also to this fact. Taking the combined surpluses for the years 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, the total amount of those surpluses of all kinds was $2,079,000,000; but the receipts from nonrecurrent sources for the same years total $1,706,000,000. So that in those five years the aggregate surplus from normal or regular sources was only $373,000,000. I append a table giving this information in detail.

THE SURPLUS

Since 1920 each fiscal year has shown an excess in the ordinary receipts of the Government over expenditures chargeable against those receipts. This excess, called "the surplus," in the eight-year period since 1920 has totaled $2,692,000,000. For the fiscal year just passed it amounted to $635,000,000, the largest surplus in any one year from the operations of this Government. The following table presents the figures for each year since 1920:

Ordinary receipts and expenditures chargeable against ordinary receipts, 1920 to 1926

[On basis of daily Treasury statements (unrevised)]

Fiscal year	Total ordinary receipts	Expenditures chargeable against ordinary receipts	Surplus
1920	$6,694,565,388	$6,482,090,191	$212,475,197
1921	5,624,932,960	5,538,209,189	86,723,771
1922	4,109,104,150	3,795,302,499	313,801,651
1923	4,007,135,480	3,697,478,020	309,657,460
1924	4,012,044,701	3,506,677,715	505,366,986
1925	3,780,148,684	3,529,643,446	250,505,238
1926	3,962,755,690	3,584,987,873	377,767,817
1927	4,120,394,441	3,493,584,519	635,809,922

Given in millions of dollars, we have this comparison:

Surplus for:
1923	$310,000,000
1924	505,000,000
1925	250,000,000
1926	378,000,000
1927	636,000,000
		$2,079,000,000
Receipts from nonrecurrent sources:
1923	398,000,000
1924	336,000,000
1925	343,000,000
1926	215,000,000
1927	414,000,000
		1,706,000,000
Total surplus for five years from regular sources		373,000,000

We are not now legislating only for 1928 and 1929. This bill goes on the statute books as permanent legislation, unless it is changed for 1931, 1932, 1933, and subsequent years. When those years come there will be none of these unusual receipts to take the place of any failure in the current receipts.

We have been growing in this country, but there is a limit upon the growth of any country. Business expansion is assured only to the extent of the normal development of the country. Trading, if it grows faster than the normal development of the country, becomes topheavy and crises occur. We are proceeding in this bill on the supposition that the country will continue in a normal growth and that the foreign governments will continue to meet their payments. If we reduce the taxes too low, then there will come a time when there is a deficit in the Treasury and we will be asked in time of peace to either raise taxes or sell securities to obtain the necessary money.

RECEIPTS FOR 1926 AND 1927 COMPARED WITH ESTIMATES FOR 1928 AND 1929

For the information of the House there is given below a table showing the sources of the revenue, the receipts for 1926 and 1927, and the estimates of the Treasury for 1928 and 1929, if the present law were to remain in force. The action of the committee in making reductions was based upon the receipts and estimates given in the table.

Total	2,835,999,892	2,865,683,000	2,803,545,000	2,705,545,000

[1] Back taxes for 1926 and 1927 were not segregated as separate items, but included in the corporation and individual items. But back taxes are segregated in the estimates for 1928 and 1929.

[2] This amount of $144,479,892 includes among other items the following:

Gift tax	$3,175,000
Capital-stock tax	97,386,000
Brokers	4,324,000
Other excise taxes	11,938,000

which were either discontinued or included in other items in subsequent years.

ESTIMATES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS 1928 AND 1929 COMPARED WITH ACTUAL AMOUNTS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1927

The following table summarizes cash receipts and expenditures during the fiscal year 1927 and the estimated receipts and expenditures for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929 on the basis of the latest information received from the Bureau of the Budget:

Summary of receipts and expenditures on the basis of daily Treasury statements (unrevised)

Deficiency in postal receipts [2]	27,263,191	30,370,400	15,270,042

[1] Other public-debt expenditures and public-debt receipts, as shown in this statement, are exclusive of $2,428,673,500 Treasury certificates issued and retired within the same fiscal year.

[2] The postal deficiency for 1927 and the estimated postal deficiencies for 1928 and 1929 are included in the ordinary expenditures shown above and in the general classification of ordinary expenditures and estimated ordinary expenditures on p. 31.

Nonrecurrent revenues have been an important factor in recent surpluses, as the following table indicates:

Fiscal year	Surplus	Recurrent income	Irregular or nonrecurrent income
1926	$377,000,000	$162,000,000	$215,000,000
1927	635,000,000	221,000,000	414,000,000
1928 (estimated)	455,000,000	137,000,000	318,000,000
1929 (estimated)	274,000,000	199,000,000	75,000,000
1929 estimate based on Bureau of the Budget's figures	252,000,000	177,000,000	75,000,000

These irregular and nonrecurring items are estimated to decline $96,000,000 in 1928 below the 1927 receipts, and $243,000,000 in 1929 below estimated receipts for 1928, leaving total receipts from these sources in that year (1929) of only $75,000,000.

Since 1920 surpluses have generally resulted because the reductions in expenditures have exceeded the reductions in receipts under the several revenue acts, because assets acquired during the war have been gradually disposed of and the moneys received therefrom covered into the Treasury, and because reductions in taxes have stimulated business and industry. In 1925 the expenditures increased and receipts declined, with the result that the surplus in that year was less than half that of the preceding year. In 1927, when the largest surplus occurred, receipts increased and expenditures diminished.

The following table compares the estimates of receipts for the fiscal year 1927 with the actual collections:

Comparison of estimates with collections for the fiscal year 1927

[Estimates made October, 1926]

Item	Estimates	Collections	Over-estimate	Under-estimate
Corporation tax	$1,120,000,000	$1,125,000,000		$5,000,000
Miscellaneous revenue	619,000,000	646,000,000		27,000,000
Individual income	820,000,000	763,000,000	$57,000,000
Back-tax collections	250,000,000	331,000,000		81,000,000
Total	[1] 2,809,000,000	2,865,000,000	57,000,000	113,000,000

[1] Making the net overestimate $56,000,000 in internal-revenue collections.

This table shows that the corporation tax was underestimated only $5,000,000, while the collections from individual income taxes were overestimated $57,000,000. The miscellaneous revenue was underestimated by $27,000,000, largely due to the greatly increased consumption of cigarettes, and is not likely to be repeated. There was also about $9,000,000 collected on final returns from the capital-stock tax, which has been repealed.

The back-tax collections were underestimated $81,000,000. This was caused by a special drive made by the Treasury. It has heretofore been shown that the receipts from back taxes from now on will greatly decrease. The whole matter may be summed up by saying that the sources of revenue have now reached a normal condition and that estimates can be made with approximate accuracy, and reductions can be properly made only in accordance with these estimates.

HOW THE ESTIMATES WERE MADE

The Treasury's estimates as to expenditures are based on the figures furnished by the Budget Bureau, which submits them after a careful survey of the needs of all departments and bureaus and with complete knowledge of the appropriations to be recommended to the Congress for the year in question. It must be noted that the estimates of expenditures submitted to the Ways and Means Committee did not include increased expenditures which may result from new legislation such as flood relief. The present Treasury estimates of receipts are based on a careful analysis of (1) probable receipts from miscellaneous sources in the light of past experience and taking into consideration the periods in which the proceeds of capital assets still in hand are likely to be realized; (2) a careful study of probable future tax collections on account of previous years, commonly known as back-tax collections, based on the number of cases on hand, the current monthly rate of yield from this source, and an estimate of the amount involved in unsettled cases; and (3) in so far as current tax and customs receipts are concerned, on the assumption that neither in 1928 nor in 1929 will the yield fall substantially below that of the fiscal year 1927, in spite of the fact that business in the calendar year 1927 has not apparently reached the high level of 1926, a fact that must affect tax receipts for the last half of the fiscal year 1928 and the first half of the fiscal year 1929.

Three experts in the Treasury, Mr. Charles R. Nash, Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Joseph S. McCoy, Government Actuary, and Mr. John F. Ebersole, statistician of the Treasury, acting independently, prepared estimates on the several items of revenue. Then, in conference with Hon. Ogden L. Mills, Undersecretary of the Treasury, the official estimates were agreed upon, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. During the time the estimates were in course of preparation conference was had with General Lord, Chief of the Budget. These estimates are as follows:

The existence of a surplus does not prove that the Government has a continuing revenue in excess of its normal requirements. Estimates for coming years must take into account temporary and nonrecurring revenues, the business conditions of the country, the increase of expenditures incident to the growth of the country, and that unexpected demands may be made such as those arising out of the recent floods and other expenditures for purposes authorized by Congress in legislation enacted subsequent to the date of the estimates. The surplus arising from the excess of earnings from recurrent sources over the yearly expenditures forms the real basis of safe and sane tax reduction.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FURLOW). The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DRANE].

ESTATE TAX AS APPLIED TO THE STATE OF FLORIDA

Mr. DRANE. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said in regard to the State of Florida in connection with inheritance taxes, so much jealousy has been shown by one part of the public, so much misapprehension has been indulged in by others, so much misinformation has been disseminated by others, either willfully or through ignorance as to the truth in the application of a great question to a great State, that it seems only right and proper that a correct history of the constitutional amendment to the constitution of the State of Florida should be given, so that those who sincerely seek the truth may be informed.

HISTORY OF THE STATE

This, the southernmost of all the States—the first in settlement, the last in development—has a history of romance, adventure, and achievement such as to compel the admiration of all the world. It has been successively under the flags of Spain, France, England, for a brief session under the flag of the Republic of Florida—a historical event almost forgotten—then the flag of the United States, then the Confederate States, and again, thank God, under the flag of the United States, where it will float until flags shall be no more.

THE FLAGS

The Spanish flag planted on Florida soil by Juan Ponce de Leon in the year 1513, bearing the quartered arms of Castile and Leon on a red and white field, is generally accepted as having been the first European standard flown on American soil. It was used by Columbus in 1492, Panfilo de Narvaez in 1528, and Hernando de Soto in 1539.

The French flag, unfurled over Fort Caroline on the St. Johns River by René Goulaine de Laudonnière in the year 1564, bearing three golden fleur-de-lis on a blue field, had its origin in the legendary blue cloak of St. Martin, which he shared with a beggar at Amiens and was familiarly known as the chape de Martin. This standard was used as the national French flag until the birth of the tricolor during the revolution.

The British flag, unfurled over Florida during the British dominion, 1763 to 1783, bearing on a blue field the combined crosses of St. George and St. Andrew—the patron saints of England and Scotland—became the first union jack of Great Britain by proclamation of James I of England upon the union of Scotland and England in the year 1603, and was the only flag used over forts and public buildings in the English colonies.

The battle flag of the Confederacy, adopted in 1861, was unfurled over Florida after her secession from the Union on the 10th day of January, 1861.

The Stars and Stripes of the United States, bearing the 23 stars for the 23 States of the Union, was unfurled over St. Augustine on the 16th day of July, over Pensacola on the 21st day of July, 1821, upon the ceding of Florida to the United States by Spain.

It was ceded to the United States by Spain in 1819, and its first Territorial governor was Andrew Jackson, who had fought the Battle of New Orleans only a little while before, and who thereby made it possible for the United States to come into possession not only of all the country in the Mississippi Valley and beyond, but of this, the fairest of all the land of this continent.

The Territory of Florida became a State in 1845; went out of the Union in January, 1861, only to return again in 1865.

The State began its real development into the modern Florida, as the public knows it, with the advent of the railroad about 40 years ago. Its growth was sure and its development was along lines of conservatism. In 1894–95 a disastrous freeze swept over the citrus country, as it then existed in the north and central portions of the State, as a result of which the industry was transferred to the lower peninsula, with Polk County and the ridge section as the center, and there was an influx of settlers into south Florida from the Gulf to the Atlantic coast, resulting in a phenomenal development for a number of years with a consequent increase in values of property. The people were conservative, progressive, happy, and prosperous. About 1923 some evil genius from outside the State started an era of speculation, running prices beyond the bounds of reason and causing a very saturnalia of unwise investment and fictitious values. The conservative people of the State deplored this and had but little part in it, but it was impossible to stop it until the peak of unwise speculation was reached, and then in 1926 came the inevitable reaction—thus ended the so-called "Florida boom." After a few months of confusion and dismay the better people—those who had wrought and builded through all the years of a generation—set their houses in order, charged off their losses, and are again enjoying peace and prosperity. They have worked out their own salvation, while those who came only to gamble and lost are heaping anathemas on the State, which hopes to see them no more.

HISTORY OF TAXATION

From the beginning of her statehood Florida has had only two forms of taxation; viz, ad valorem taxes, based upon a very low valuation of real and personal property, and license taxes. No other tax has ever been applied. She has no income tax, no inheritance tax, no stock-transfer tax, no tax on intangibles, no severance tax—just a plain, unmistakable tax on real and personal property and a license tax for the privilege of doing business. The form of taxation is simple and easily understood. This form of taxation has existed certainly since 1860 and probably for many years prior thereto.

About the year 1911 a gentleman of very great prominence, now deceased, an advocate of many ideas which to the conservative people of Florida seemed strange doctrines, upon coming to the State began an agitation for new forms of taxation, and in the course of time some of his theories as to taxation, in the form of litigation, came before the supreme court of the State. The court, in a decision handed down in January, 1911, which decision is to be found on page 65, in the Sixty-first Florida Reports, contained the following language:

> The defendant says that under the provisions of sections 1 and 5 of article 9 of the State constitution only two classes of taxes can be levied in this State; an ad valorem tax and a tax upon licenses. The correctness of this contention may be conceded.

That, Mr. Chairman, was a clear declaration from our highest judicial tribunal, but the agitation continued, from the same source, with the specious argument which has often been used as to our highest courts, to the effect "that courts change their minds as they change their personnel." This has been applied even to the Supreme Court of the United States. The legislature was then in session, and in order to forever settle the question a constitutional amendment was adopted, submitted to the people, and ratified by an overwhelming majority. This was a number of years before the so-called "boom" in Florida.

That is the history of the constitutional amendment in Florida, and there has never been the least desire on the part of her people to make a bid for tax dodgers or men of great wealth except as men of great wealth, properly used, are welcome in any other State.

The constitution of the State sets forth that there shall never be, after the adoption of the amendment referred to, a levy of an income or inheritance tax. We have no desire to change the constitution in this respect. We will not be coerced by an act of Congress into changing our constitution. There are, if I am not in error, 46 States which have some form of estate tax. There are two States which have none—Alabama and Florida. Florida prohibits it by her constitution.

It is a very specious argument on the part of the proponents of this tax to offer to refund to the several 46 States "80 per cent of the tax due the Government of the United States." It is hard to resist, of course, and the result is a combination of 46 States against 2.

If the gentlemen on this floor, representing the 46 States, would only stop and think, they would realize that by eliminating the Federal inheritance tax in its entirety, thereby preserving the principles of State rights, their States would pay no inheritance tax at all and the Federal Government would have to raise its revenues by some other method, leaving to the States the right to conduct their own fiscal systems, as was intended by the Constitution when originally written, and where it rightfully belongs.

The Constitution of the United States originally provided for three forms of taxation—a tax on imports, an excise tax, and a direct tax on property. The two forms first mentioned still exist, and the Government has found the third to be impracticable and unworkable. This remained unchanged until the Federal income tax amendment, and even then the amendment never contemplated a tax on inheritance.

The Constitution of the United States clearly contemplated that every State should have its own system of taxation without Federal interference, and that the Federal Government should raise its revenues by the two methods hereinbefore mentioned.

I realize, of course, from the debates and the record votes heretofore taken on this question that I am making a hopeless appeal; that I am waging a losing fight; but that will not relieve me of doing my duty as I see it by the people of my State, and for that reason I am entering this solemn protest. The State has been the target of malice and misrepresentation until it has become a public scandal, and the people there are beginning to wonder if they are still a part of the American Union. All we desire is a square deal, and we are not getting it.

Realizing that we are for the moment under an unlucky star, I do not expect that what I say here will have great weight or change a vote. I merely say it by way of protest and in order that the people of my State may understand how hopeless is their cause under present conditions. I expect at the proper time to offer an amendment to the pending bill which, if adopted, will have the effect of a repeal of the inheritance-tax feature of the present law, and upon this I shall ask for a record vote.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the repeal of the Federal estate tax is a subject that has been discussed from time to time. It is a subject that our Committee on Ways and Means saw fit to exclude by an almost unanimous vote. It is a subject, however, that more than half of the States of the Union have seen fit to request the Congress to give relief on in this bill. More than half the legislatures of the States have seen fit to pass resolutions and memorials urging the Congress to repeal it. A majority of the people of the United States have requested, by legislative act and otherwise, that the Federal estate tax be repealed.

I do not believe there is a member of the committee or a Member of the House that really believes that this tax is now collected for revenue purposes. I do not believe there is a member of the committee that believes, really and sincerely, that States should be compelled to have their laws in tax matters governed and regulated by the Federal power; this is a power which rightfully belongs to the several States. It is time for the Federal Government to retire from the estate field of taxation, leaving it with the respective States. The people of the Nation demand it, and we should heed this demand.

Gentlemen of the committee, I believe it is time to wake up and join with a majority of the people of our country and by your vote, when the Florida delegation submits a motion to recommit, which at the proper time it will do, to the Committee on Ways and Means with the instructions that the Federal estate tax be repealed, stand with us and vote with us on this motion and help us to faithfully represent the will of the majority and at the same time protect the rights of the sovereign States. Centralization and the encroachment of the Federal power is a dangerous enemy to the ultimate welfare of the individuals of our great Nation's population.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. I do not believe there are many people who understand the fact that 80 per cent of this tax collected by the Federal Government is returned to the States if they have such a tax provided by their statutes. I wonder if Florida could collect an inheritance tax for 20 per cent, or one-fifth. Does the gentleman think any of the States could?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. The fact of the matter is, as the gentleman knows, Florida's State constitution enjoins us from collecting an inheritance or income tax, and I have not looked into the matter indicated by my friend. However, I do know that inasmuch as this tax is collected just for the supposed purposes of making the laws in taxation uniform it is nothing more or less, gentlemen of the committee, than a mockery. Here we represent our States and make a mockery of this issue under the guise of making normal or making regular all tax assessment in the respective States. I do not believe we should hold ourselves out as exemplars to carry the mockery any further. I fear my colleagues are deceived as to the real importance now attached to this matter by the several States.

If the States desire the estate tax, surely they should collect it. My State does not desire this tax. It says tax the living, not the dead. We do not believe in a death tax. If we are taxed all of our lives, then should we pay a tax after death?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Yes; to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think he is altogether consistent in the statement he has made——

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia that his State's legislature, realizing the facts about this 80 per cent credit, passed a law which gave that State 80 per cent of the amount collected by the Federal Government, and the State received nothing except that 80 per cent; after all Georgia can not be said to really have a State inheritance law; it has only challenged the Federal statute and formed its State law in order to reap the benefits from the Federal law.

Mr. COX. But I thought I understood the gentleman to say that he was of the conviction that there was no purpose or intention on the part of the committee reporting this bill to influence States whatsoever in their tax policies.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I am sorry I did not make myself clear, I will say to my friend from Georgia. I think the absolute purpose of this committee is to undertake to coerce all States into passing laws like the Federal Government wants them to pass in their tax matters; and I can speak for the State of Florida when I say it is not going to repeal its inheritance tax amendment of its constitution. Florida is not going to assess an estate tax. [Applause.] Gentlemen of the committee, time is too limited to fully discuss this all-important subject to-day, but before the final vote is reached on this bill I expect to address you at length on the subject.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YON].

Mr. YON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am a new Member, and I recognize that I am kind of out of place by taking the floor so soon after coming here; but, gentlemen, this is a question of vital interest to my State. I am not going to take up much of your time.

This question was brought to the fore about two years ago when the matter was under consideration in your bill. I am coming to you to-day to call to your mind the reasons that were given about two years ago. I know that some of you were somewhat frightened about the consequences of investments that you or your friends made in my State. There was a boom on in Florida and everybody wanted to go to Florida or were talking about Florida. Since then conditions have changed, and you ought to feel a little different about Florida. Some of you or your friends made investments when they thought they were going to get rich quick; but the boom failed.

Florida was not responsible for that; it was the speculators. Has Florida changed? No; she has not changed. We have gone on with the greatest road development; one that is wonderful. I believe we are carrying on the most gigantic road program of any State in the Union, considering the wealth, population, and mileage.

What we have done is regardless of the boom consequences. Florida is the oldest and the newest State of the Union. Gentlemen of the House, you ought to reconsider your action. We have no fight with the other Membership of this House, but as a Democrat, a natural-born Democrat, for if I lived in Maine or any rock-ribbed Republican State in the Union with my nature, I would have been a Democrat. [Applause.] I believe in the rights of the people to govern themselves. I believe my State has a right to govern itself and that the Federal Government has no right to say we will take from you that right.

Now, in the legislation two years ago you did not name Florida. You remember what the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee said about Florida two years ago. If he has forgotten, if he will go back to the RECORD of two years ago, he will see what he did say. I think he cast an aspersion on the State, a small State, great in possibilities, but small in population and yet great in population. We say to you gentlemen this State of ours has only 4 Representatives, and you 431 Members throughout the United States passed this legislation. We did not pass the constitutional amendment trying to subvert the Capital of the National Government from getting what was due it. You can pass any kind of legislation, but give us our right to say whether Florida wants an inheritance tax or an income tax or not.

That is what I say, and I hate to take issue with you Democrats because your fathers fought, bled, and died to defend the rights of the citizens of the States. The State of Florida is a sovereign part of this great Government.

Now, you Democrats from our neighboring States in the Southland and scattering Democrats from other States, I hate to take issue with you, for I expect to live with you at least two sessions. I may not come back, but I came here to fight for the rights of my State, and I say I would not vote for a bill or any provision in a bill that takes away the right of my State to govern itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. YON. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YON. Of course, the people of Florida did not vote this inheritance and income tax provision in the constitution to protect the rich of our State, but as we have between a fourth and a fifth of the total of the seacoast of the Nation, and thousands of wonderful home sites, also with the hills and lakes of the interior of the State and with millions of acres of arable, fertile soil that needs no irrigation or drainage, except, maybe, local, we thought of withdrawing some items of taxation to attract to these vacant and unpopulated areas. Of course, gentlemen, you can override our constitution, but with Florida's proximity to the centers of population, and with our climate, with our fishing, hunting, bathing, fertile soil, and hospitable people Florida will ever act as a magnet to draw ever-increasing thousands from less hospitable climate than is Florida's and to till her fertile soil and enjoy her luscious fruits and general agricultural products. Verily, gentlemen, Florida will continue to go forward morally, intellectually, and economically. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to consider two phases of the bill which has been presented for the action of the House on revenue reduction: First, the changes in language and administrative details which have resulted from the work of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation; second, the effect of the bill on the average taxpayer.

BRIEF REASONS FOR COMPLICATED LAW

The Underwood Tariff Act of 1913 carried the first general income tax provision following the adoption of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution. Rates were later increased during the Wilson administration until this country entered the war, when it became necessary to raise enormous sums by all forms of taxation, including heavy levies on income. The peak was reached in 1920 when, under the act of 1918, the stupendous sum of $4,000,000,000 was collected in income and profits taxes, comprising 59 per cent of all ordinary receipts. Since then the revisions downward have been almost as rapid as the revisions upward between 1914 and 1918.

The primary purpose of this bill is to reduce the tax burden still further and to apportion it more equitably among taxpayers. The reductions in the tax rates and the steps taken to equalize the burden are explained in detail in the report accompanying the bill.

This is the seventh revenue bill before Congress in the past 12 years. During that short period the income tax has become the principal source of Federal revenue. It has dwarfed the once important customs duties. In 1914 the income tax produced less revenue than the tobacco tax. In 1920 it produced $4,000,000,000 and it produces currently over one and one-half billions. The income tax has doubtless grown faster in point of importance than any other known in modern times.

During the high tax years, 1917 to 1921, it was important in the act to emphasize fairness and equity. An unfair distribution of the tax burden might ruin a business or an industry. As a consequence, special provisions, limitation, exceptions, and qualifications came into the law. It was important also to make the law as certain and clear-cut as it could be made, so that business men might know definitely what their tax obligations would be. Detailed provisions by the score were written into the revenue acts for this purpose.

Of late years, with greatly reduced rates, the primary emphasis has been shifted to simplification. There is no doubt that the law is complex. Each successive revenue act during the past decade has been more bulky than its predecessor and less easy to understand. Contrary, perhaps, to public opinion, this complexity has not resulted from lack of interest on the part of Congress or a lack of desire to phrase the law in more simple language. The circumstance that the income tax laws of most foreign countries and of many of the States are as complicated as the Federal law should give food for thought. It is not merely a coincidence that almost all the modern income tax laws are complicated.

The fact is that any law which provides in detail for the computation of the net income of three and one-half millions of individuals and corporations must be more or less complicated. Nevertheless, with sufficient time to work out the problem, a measurable degree of simplification is possible and important steps toward simplification have been taken in this bill.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

While in general the details of the appointment of the joint committee may be fairly well known to the membership of the House, it may not be out of place to refer to the conditions which brought about the creation of the committee, its present studies, and the advantages which will accrue from its continuance.

In passing the revenue act of 1926, Congress made provision for a joint committee on internal revenue taxation, the duties of which, as outlined in section 1203, are to investigate the operation and effects of the internal-revenue tax system and to devise measures and methods for simplification, particularly of the income tax. It was thought that the time had come to make inquiry into the causes for the complications in the law. It was believed that sufficient experience had accumulated to afford valuable lessons in drafting and administering an income tax law.

The committee, which is composed of members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and Ways and Means Committee of the House, is assisted in its labors by an advisory group of the recognized leading tax experts of the country who generously responded to the appeal of the chairman for their aid in solving the many problems.

The joint committee is composed of two divisions—the division of simplification and the division of investigation. Both divisions are splendidly manned by efficient staffs.

A very large part of the work of the Ways and Means Committee during the past month has consisted of studying the recommendations of the joint committee, shaping into proper form the policies which have been accepted and including them in the bill now before the House for its consideration.

REARRANGEMENT OF NEW BILL

The most important step toward simplification, perhaps, is the rearrangement of the sections in the act. There are certain fundamental sections, such as those which define gross income, deductions, and net income, and those which impose the normal tax, the surtax, and the corporation tax, which are or may be applicable to the cases of very large groups of taxpayers.

On the other hand, there are provisions in the law, such as those relating to appeals to the Board of Tax Appeals, the taxation of nonresident aliens, foreign corporations, insurance companies, and so forth, which are of practically no interest to taxpayers generally.

In all of the preceding acts these general provisions and special provisions were mixed with each other at various places in the law, so that it was impossible at any one place to find a clear statement of the basic principles of the income tax.

A scheme of rearrangement has been worked out by which the provisions of general interest to the great body of taxpayers have been grouped together in sections 11 to 65 of the bill. There is thus gathered together for the first time in a Federal income tax measure a simple statement of the basic principles of the tax as applied to the average taxpayer.

The remaining provisions in the act are placed in supplements, which include sections 101 to 322 of the bill. It will be seen that the supplements correspond with the arrangement of the general provisions at the beginning of the bill—that is, Supplement A corresponds with Part I, both dealing with rates of tax; Supplement B with Part II, both dealing with the computation of net income; Supplement C with Part III, and so on.

The provisions peculiarly applicable to estates and trusts have been collected in Supplement E, those relating to partnerships in Supplement F, those relating to insurance companies in Supplement G, those relating to nonresident aliens in Supplement H, and so forth.

Supplement L is devoted to sections relating to the assessment and collection of deficiencies, which includes the procedure leading up to an appeal to the Board of Tax Appeals. Supplement M relates to interest and additions to the tax, Supplement N to claims against transferees and fiduciaries, and Supplement O to overpayments.

It has often been suggested that the income tax law should be arranged on some "logical" basis. As a matter of fact, such a rearrangement was prepared but was rejected in favor of the present form of rearrangement on the ground that the present form is more practical. There is good reason to believe that as a result of this rearrangement once taxpayers have become accustomed to its use, the finding of any particular part of the law will be made more easy and more simple.

A marked change in the method of handling the language in the law applicable to both individuals and corporations has been adopted. Formerly there were separate provisions containing general rules for individuals and corporations in Titles II and III. Now these are all combined into one subtitle, B, appearing in the new print on pages 9 to 47. This new method will prove very much more convenient to both the individual and the corporation.

From an examination of the bill it will readily be seen that there are more changes in the suggested new language than have appeared in any bill since the first downward revision. The greatest accomplishment toward simplification is the rearrangement of the text, both in form and in substance. In this rearrangement the various related sections have been grouped together.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Particular attention is directed to the table of contents under Title I, income tax. This is entirely new in any legislative draft and will be found most convenient for reference purposes.

The sections of the bill are arranged very much as the taxpayer is likely to have to refer to them. By reference to the table of contents it will be seen that the various subtitles and supplements cover all the subjects contained in the act and that they are arranged in the most convenient manner for the use of the taxpayer.

CROSS REFERENCE

Formerly the cross references in the act required a taxpayer to familiarize himself in large measure with various features scattered throughout the law. The majority of individual taxpayers now will only need to understand sections 11 to 65 of the bill. Then, if other items are applicable to a taxpayer in making out his return, the places where such items are to be found appear directly following the paragraphs concerned.

Take, for instance, Part II, computation of net income. Net income is to be computed under section 22, less deductions allowed in section 23, so that to ascertain his actual net income the ordinary taxpayer has only two sections to consider, the one covering gross income and the other covering allowable deductions, the difference between the two representing the net income. You will find these references throughout the bill, but the very disagreeable cross references have been very largely eliminated.

Where it has been necessary to retain cross references, a new scheme is used whereby each reference gives on its face a summary of the contents of the provision to which the reader is referred.

The following are examples:

For corporations exempt from tax, see section 103, page 13.
For use of inventories, see section 22(c), page 33.
Closing of taxable year in case of jeopardy, see section 146, page 38.
For provision as to consolidated returns of affiliated corporations, see section 141, page 41.

You will also note that section 64 indicates where to find the taxes imposed by this title under Title II of the revenue act of 1926, and the section numbers used in this bill are shown in lieu of those in the 1926 act.

REPETITION

The former acts contained much repetition. Section 234 of the 1926 act repeats much of section 214, and this is true of many other sections. A considerable amount of this repetition is avoided by consolidating these provisions in the new bill. The work is such an intricate one and so extensive in its ramifications that time is a very large element in solving the problems that have grown up.

STABILIZATION OF LAW

The income-tax system is becoming more and more stabilized both as to the form of the law and its administration. The present language will, we think, be fairly permanent. My plea has continually been to have the language of the act sufficiently plain to enable the taxpayer to make an honest return of his tax indebtedness without the employment of an expert accountant or a lawyer specializing in tax matters. This purpose may not have been entirely accomplished in the present revision, but certainly marked progress has been made.

The results of the changes in the law as suggested in the bill now before the House will not be apparent in the form of the blank issued by the Treasury on which returns are made, but the advantages to the taxpayer will be reflected in plainer language in the law and in the manner of grouping related items.

There is, of course, no certainty as to when further changes can be recommended by the joint committee with a view to correcting complicated sections not dealt with in this bill. It is, however, fair to say that the work of the joint committee can be carried on very advantageously for some time. By having sufficient time to make corrections in the language of the law and recommending changes in its administrative details much more benefit will later accrue to the taxpayer than appears from the present revision.

When the revised law is printed in the form of an act there will be marked reduction in the number of pages. It is to be regretted that it seemed advisable to add several pages of new matter, but these have been added for the purpose of better administration and clarification. It can also be said that the additions are not general in nature and will not be a source of study or investigation by any large number of taxpayers. As a rule, they apply only to special cases and therefore people affected by them are very limited in number. As an illustration, I call attention to sections 607, 608, 609, and 610. These replace section 1106 (a) of the old law, but they refer only to a narrow class of cases falling under the statute of limitations.

SUBSTANTIVE PROVISIONS

Among the recommendations of the joint committee which have been carried into the new bill, other than those heretofore mentioned, may be listed the following:

The estate tax and other miscellaneous tax titles of the 1926 act have not been repeated in this act, as was the custom in former years. Changes have been made by appropriate amendments which will be found at the back of the bill. In other words, the present bill is, for all practical purposes, solely an income tax act. In view of the limited interest in the estate and miscellaneous taxes, this is believed to be an important simplification.

The recommendation of the joint committee with respect to consolidated returns was adopted in substance, and it should result for future years in simplifying considerably the administration of the law to the cases of affiliated corporations.

The recommendation of the joint committee with respect to Federal tax liens was adopted, which simplifies and makes more flexible the present law.

The recommendations with respect to the bar of the statute of limitations made by the joint committee were adopted in so far as they relate to section 1106 (a). Though the result does not simplify particularly the wording of the statute, it does clarify a very muddled situation.

The joint committee's recommendation with respect to the basis for gain or loss on sale by an executor was adopted, as was also its recommendations with respect to interest on overpayments of taxes and closing agreements.

The survey of administration prepared by the Treasury Department and submitted to the joint committee provided the basis for a study which should result in considerable simplification of the administration of the law.

DELAYS IN DISPUTED CASES

One of the chief sources of complaint from taxpayers in the past has been the delays in settlement of disputed cases. First, the Board of Tax Appeals was set up, in the hope of overcoming some of this trouble. The board has been successful in its work, but cases have been accumulating so rapidly before the board that it is getting more and more behind in its work. In other words, more cases are coming to the board than it is able to dispose of currently.

Various efforts have been made to cure this situation. Section 704 of the new bill will, in the opinion of the department, accomplish much good. The difficulty in the past has been the impossibility of retaining experienced men at the salaries paid. As soon as men became proficient and competent the lure of outside salaries would bring about their resignations.

Paragraph (a) establishes a new rate of compensation for assistants to the general counsel and administrative and technical employees. Men who are selected for these special positions can feel a permanency of employment and have an independence of action which was impossible under the old conditions.

We look to see the appeal cases settled with greater expedition than in the past. The contrast of our bureau with that of Great Britain is most marked. There men start in subordinate or minor positions in anticipation of making Government tax business their life work, which results in a personnel skilled in the subject matter. Our system has produced just the opposite result, the turnover in the personnel being very large among the men who have reached the point of usefulness in the bureau.

FUTURE WORK OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Under section 1203 of the act of 1926 the joint committee is required to make a definite report to Congress not later than December 31, 1927, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable. It is to be expected that this report will in large measure be reflected in the language of the bill now before the House. It will, therefore, be apparent that this bill is in a sense a report of progress, because it is well recognized that there are many more items which will need further study by the joint committee.

As illustrations, I call attention to section 24 (b), entitled "Holders of life or terminable interest." Very likely there are Members of the House capable of explaining just what that paragraph is intended to accomplish so far as holders of life or terminable interest are concerned, but this is the sort of language which has been, in the language of the street, considered "good picking" for expert accountants and high-priced lawyers.

Another paragraph beyond the comprehension of the ordinary brain is section 143, "The withholding of tax at source," and the following pages.

It may be asked why such items as these appear in the revised bill. The reply is perfectly simple, that there has not been sufficient time to rewrite all such paragraphs in an effort to secure plainer language.

In my opinion the joint committee, by the adoption of the rearrangement which has been approved by the Ways and Means Committee, has fully justified its creation, and the many additional changes that have been made will also prove their value as taxpayers have occasion to use the new law.

There are a number of things, in addition to those mentioned above, which should be done to simplify the law still further. Though a discussion of these measures is not in point in the present connection, it may be said that the compilation of a code which will contain all of the administrative provisions now governing the determination, assessment, and collection of taxes is a vital necessity. These provisions at the present time are scattered throughout the various revenue acts and the general statutes. The compilation of such a code is a large undertaking, but is well worth while.

An analysis must be made section by section of the entire act in order to develop simpler basic principles. The entire scheme of taxing nonresident aliens and foreign corporations needs revision, and it is fraught with difficulties to him who undertakes the task. It is likely that careful study will disclose the possibility of stating many of the provisions now in the law in a more simple and direct manner. The extent of the simplification achieved will be a matter of conjecture until the work is completed.

EFFECT OF REDUCTIONS ON AVERAGE TAXPAYER

In speaking relative to previous revisions it has been my custom to show the effect of tax reductions upon the average man. One result of the revision of 1926 was the elimination as taxpayers of practically 2,000,000 citizens. This was brought about by increased exemptions, both for single and married men; the increase of the earned-income provision; and the removal of numerous special taxes. It perhaps would be more accurate to refer to the effect of the present law upon the average taxpayer than upon the average man.

Before the passage of the 1926 act, 4,500,000 individuals paid taxes. That act reduced the number to about 2,500,000. Of the total tax collected from individuals for 1925, amounting to $734,000,000, 327,018 individuals contributed $701,000,000, while 2,174,148 individuals contributed the balance of $33,000,000. In other words, 2.2 per cent of the population paid practically the entire income tax, and the remaining 97.8 per cent of the population paid almost no tax.

Therefore the benefit to the average man is represented by the reduction in the tax on the corporation of which he may be a stockholder, and also by the increased circulation of money in business and trade, because by removing $236,000,000 from the tax payments into the Federal Treasury there is just that much more in circulation for business purposes—just that additional stimulation to the general business welfare of the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Are not these intricacies to which the gentleman called attention kept in the law because of the fact that these selfsame experts framed the bill largely for the committee?

Mr. TREADWAY. There are a few men, and one of them has recently retired from the Government service—Mr. Gregg, of Texas, the son of a former member from the gentleman's own State——

Mr. BLANTON. And than whom there is no better expert——

Mr. TREADWAY. Just a moment—whose mental capacity to regard phrases as simple that the gentleman and I would regard as most intricate, is astounding. When a gentleman like Mr. Gregg comes before the Ways and Means Committee, for the time being his explanation goes, and we can understand him, but the moment he gets out of the room I defy even the brilliant chairman of our committee to carry with him the explanation that such a man as Mr. Gregg has made to us. We simply can not comprehend him, and, further than that, even if he or men like him did draw up this complicated language, the matter itself is so complicated and intricate that we can not write it into plain, primer English.

Mr. BLANTON. And the result of that is that every business man in the gentleman's district in Massachusetts and everyone in my district in Texas must hire a high-class expert tax lawyer, who charges big fees, to make his tax returns for him.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have said hundreds of times that the law ought to be such that the average man need not employ high-priced counsel in order that he may be honest with the Federal Government. On the other hand, any tax bill is bound to be complicated. You can not get away from that feature of it. When you get into some of these exceptional things, such as we are referring to, the best man that you can employ is cheap at the charge he may make you. On the other hand, the great majority of income-tax payers do not have to deal with these complicated sections and so do not need attorneys or accountants.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was just about to say to the gentleman from Texas that a Government expert is provided for those who want to have an expert to make out their returns for them.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, we have our expert down here in the Sergeant at Arm's office to fix our reports for us, and he is easily accessible, but take a ranchman out in JOHN GARNER'S district——

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, he can go to JOHN. He would explain it to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Or in CLAUDE HUDSPETH'S district, for instance, where there are counties perhaps 200 miles across them, hence sometimes he has a long way to go in order to get an expert.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I might suggest in that connection, Mr. Chairman, that the farmers out in my district do not have much income tax to pay. It is evidently different down in Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there are some rich ranchmen in Texas who have pretty good income taxes to pay, for some of them own big ranches not only in Texas but in New Mexico, Wyoming, and even in old Mexico.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And those that have incomes under $5,000 a year can use the short form, and anybody can fill that out.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the ones I am talking about pay several times $5,000 in income taxes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. I come from a farming district, and I know one man there who before he could get his tax reports in shape paid a fee of $9,000. It seems to me that the law could be simplified, and it ought to be simplified, so that such a thing would not be necessary.

Mr. TREADWAY. The joint committee has, in my opinion, done wonders which will result in correcting such cases as that to which the gentleman refers, and if he will examine the sections to which I have referred he can readily see that in a brief period of a year much has been done to reduce the complications. It is our desire to iron them all out when time permits.

Mr. REED of New York. It is unfortunate, however, because it causes much criticism against the Government and against Congress.

Mr. TREADWAY. We feel that when the present bill is enacted into law and the people become accustomed to the arrangement and find how much easier it is to find sections one is interested in everyone will feel very much better toward the tax law.

Mr. REED of New York. I hope so.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that will be demonstrated in the use of the new law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will remember that two years ago when we made an unusual effort to simplify and clarify these matters experts from the Treasury told us that they had written and rewritten many of these sections as many as fifty times in order to make them simpler and more easily understood.

Mr. TREADWAY. And that on top of that the more they rewrite them the more they find things that will crop up to bother them in the future.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Ought not the gentleman to state to the House in connection with the simplification that the testimony before the committee was—and I am not certain that it is not in the report of the advisory committee—that 10 per cent of the errors existing in the last recommendation are attributable to the earned-income provision, and that you could strike the earned-income provision out, strike off the one-half per cent on the normal tax, and your loss to the Treasury would be about the same and the benefit about the same, and thus do away with 10 per cent of the errors now coming into the Treasury Department?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, the revised law when adopted will do away with a great deal more than the labor of preparation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to say, because we are now interested in this particular subject, that I intend to put in the RECORD this afternoon, to which I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will agree as to the authority, that the annual toll to the taxpayers of the country is $100,000,000 of toll for returning, $300,000,000 for accounting, making $400,000,000 of toll paid under this form of levying a tax.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will be glad to yield such part of my time as I can spare.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If it is just so simple that they would come up and pay the taxes claimed by the Treasury Department, they would save this $400,000,000. Most of the spending of the money is for the obtaining of reductions, and so forth.

Mr. TREADWAY. The levying of a tax bill is always objectionable to people.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Can you make the law any more simple than business? Is not the American business highly intricate with combinations and subsidiaries, so intricate that people have to get a lawyer? It is against the law to kill a dog, but that does not settle a lawsuit. You have got to get a lawyer to see whether the dog was in the way or not.

CORPORATION TAX

Mr. TREADWAY. The corporation-tax cut is the largest single reduction, being estimated at $166,000,000, and when such an enormous sum as this is kept in the general channels of business rather than paid into the Treasury of the United States, its effect is bound to be felt in the home of the average man.

We have also increased the exemption for small corporations from $2,000 to $3,000. This will be of material benefit to the average man who may be conducting his business with a partner or partners under corporate form rather than as a partnership. This arrangement appears to be more equitable for the small business concern than would have been possible under some form of partnership return.

AUTOMOBILE TAX

The next largest item of reduction is the automobile tax, which has been reduced one-half, or about $33,000,000. The committee and the House recognize the fact that there has been a great effort made to influence the Ways and Means Committee to remove the entire automobile tax. The reductions made in the 1926 act and in the present proposed revision comprise such a large part of the entire income tax that fair criticism can not be raised against the Committee for the item as it now appears.

While it is recognized that there are only a few makes of cars that can be classed as luxuries, the automobile-tax rates have never deterred a prospective purchaser from buying either a luxurious car or the cheapest make in the market, according to his ability to pay. The chief agitation for the entire removal of this tax comes from the manufacturers and the dealers on account of the inconvenience it causes them, and not from the actual purchaser of the machine.

The amount that will be raised from the sale of new cars in 1928 under the proposed revision is a large one, about $35,000,000, but the individual payment is so small that it can in no way be regarded as a handicap to any purchaser.

In connection with the effort which it is anticipated will be made to amend this item, let me call the attention of the Members to two factors. The annual Federal appropriation for good roads is $75,000,000. If no Federal tax should be paid by the automobile owner there would at once arise a clamor for the repeal of the good roads appropriation. Furthermore, the reduction in taxes proposed by the committee is between eleven and twelve million dollars in excess of the Treasury recommendation. If you undertake to increase this reduction by the sum of $33,000,000, you will imperil the enactment into law of the entire measure. My friend the average man will, I am glad to say, willingly contribute the small payment he will be required to make to the Federal Government if he has the means of purchasing a new car while this law is in effect.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall finish within that time.

Mr. HUDSON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if appropriations for better roads came before or after the levying of the automobile tax?

Mr. TREADWAY. Like all such things, the road appropriation started modestly, but has grown to large figures. The automobile tax was levied for war purposes, and the war is not paid for by the country yet. I am sorry now, but if the gentleman will pardon me, I will be glad to discuss the automobile item when we reach it under the reading of the bill. I would like to complete my statement in the time which the Chairman has courteously given me.

To show how small this automobile tax is to each purchaser, I append hereto a statement showing the taxes that will be paid on cars of various prices under the proposed rate of 1½ per cent:

Ford sedan	$6.14
Dodge sedan	9.84
Hudson sedan	15.58
Buick brougham	21.66
Hupmobile sedan	24.70
Pierce Arrow runabout	28.07
Franklin limousine	33.08
Marmon sedan	40.95
Cadillac sedan	46.06
Lincoln sedan	54.00
Locomobile touring	67.50
Locomobile sedan	82.12
Pierce Arrow landeau	90.00

It therefore appears that a tax that brings to the Government $33,000,000 in the aggregate means that a purchaser of the cheapest priced car would contribute only $6.14 to the Treasury, and the purchaser of the highest priced American-made car $90. The taxes on the low-priced cars will all be under $25, and those on the higher priced cars will all be under $100.

These figures are proof positive that the business is not injured, that no burden is laid on the buyer, and that the industry is not discriminated against by the retention of the 1½ per cent tax rate.

While there occasionally has been an effort to remove the tax on cigars and cigarettes, the people have become so thoroughly accustomed to contributing toward the revenues of the country under the tobacco schedule that little attempt has been made to have these taxes reduced below the present figures. They are recognized as a part of our general tax system. The automobile tax should be considered to some degree in the same light.

Another factor enters into this matter in the refusal of the committee to recommend the repeal of the Federal inheritance or estate tax. A very large body of our citizens feels that this tax is outside the scope of the Federal Government.

For one, I have voted to repeal the Federal estate tax in previous bills. However, this not having been done, I feel that the money that would have been saved to the taxpayers by such repeal will, under the proposed reduction of the automobile tax, be credited to the purchasers of new cars.

OTHER REDUCTIONS

Another item of reduction in a sense beneficial to the average man is the lowering of the tax on admissions, the minimum taxable admission being placed at $1 instead of 75 cents. This will reduce the expense of the average man's attendance at various entertainments.

Club dues have been treated in the same manner as the automobile tax; that is, reduced by one-half. At first it might be said that this is of no material benefit to the average man, but statistics show to what a very large extent the wage earner is a club member, either for social or physical purposes.

AGGREGATE REDUCTION

The aggregate amount of reduction represents the maximum figure that the Committee on Ways and Means feels justified in recommending to the House for adoption. There are several other possible suggestions, such as a change in the middle surtax brackets, but all these items I have enumerated must be regarded in the general program. There have been many advocates of a reduction of the corporation tax to 10 per cent, but this recommendation, like so many others, is made by those who are concerned only with that particular item and who fail to consider the aggregate amount of reduction when all other items have been included. As each 1 per cent is estimated to cause a reduction in receipts of $83,000,000, to have accepted the recommendation of many people that the corporation tax rate should be reduced to 10 per cent would have increased the reduction by $125,000,000, which will be seen to be beyond the limit of possibility. If the committee should add together all the requests for reductions, we would exceed the expected surplus by at least $200,000,000.

CONCLUSION

This bill has been conscientiously prepared by the Ways and Means Committee, and in most of the changes partisanship did not enter. There are, however, some items which do not have the united support of the committee, but the majority is confident that it represents the very highest reduction possible consistent with safety to the finances of the country. Larger reductions would imperil financial security and invite the danger of a deficit. The majority of the Ways and Means Committee, therefore, appeals to the House to accept the bill as presented.

Undoubtedly claims will be made that larger reductions are possible and very likely motions will be made that will cover such claims. If such action is taken it will be contrary to the weight of evidence before the Ways and Means Committee, which has been acting as your jury. A Member must either be a very rabid partisan or inconsiderate of the country's finances who will disregard the evidence that has been presented and, by a vote to override the provisions of this bill, jeopardize the sound basis on which the governmental financial structure rests. By such action the Member sets up his own opinion as being of more value than those of the financial experts of the country and the officials of the administration who are responsible for the proper conduct of the business affairs of the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not intended to take any time in general debate, but to reserve whatever time I desire for debate under the five-minute rule. However, Mr. TREADWAY, one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, has called attention to the fact that some members of the committee will probably offer amendments for increased reductions. I think that the statement of the gentleman is entirely correct. I think an amendment will be offered to take all the tax off of automobiles, and I think nearly all on our side over here, if not all of them, will vote for the amendment, and I dare say a great many Republican Members of the House will vote for the amendment. Most Members of this House are opposed to a sales tax on principle. When you have a sales tax you are taxing people upon their necessities, on what they have to have in order to live decently. But when you are taxing them on their income you are taxing them on their ability to pay taxes.

Therefore I hope every Democrat and every Republican, for that matter, will vote for the amendment when it is presented on the floor. I hope all Members on our side will vote to take off the admission tax, another sales tax that we think is not necessary; also club-dues taxes. Therefore I call on the Members for action when this bill is discussed next week under the five-minute rule. If I knew that there would be a deficit created in the Treasury by such action, I would not favor these amendments. But I do not think there will be a deficit. On the other hand, I think we will have a large surplus after these amendments are adopted. Secretary Mellon in his estimates for the last five years has been mistaken in the aggregate the huge amount of $1,081,000,000. Hence, we on this side of the House do not place much credence or dependence in Secretary Mellon's estimates about surpluses and deficits.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did the gentleman hear the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] this morning?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes; I heard Mr. HAWLEY; and Secretary Mellon has come before our committee for five years, and when he wanted to defeat the bonus or anything else he would predict that we would have a deficit. But he has cried "Wolf!" too often for me to think that he is sincere when he says these estimates show this or that those estimates show that.

Mr. BLANTON. And on all these various nuisance taxes he has also heard the voice of the people?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes. The gentleman from Massachusetts said only the automobile manufacturers and dealers are interested in the remission of the tax. That is not correct. About 5,000,000 purchasers of automobiles every year are interested in the repeal of this automobile tax. The purchasers of automobiles pay every dollar of automobile taxes. Hence they are greatly interested.

I think also an amendment will be offered on our side of the House to decrease the corporation tax from 11½ per cent to 11 per cent. I think we will still have a surplus after this reduction. Yet Secretary Mellon wants to make out that there will be a deficit. He does not have Mr. McCoy to make the estimate; he will have some one else do it, because we know that McCoy for many years has guessed right, and he wants somebody else to guess to suit him. Hence when the Secretary wants to show a deficit he has some one other than McCoy to make his estimates.

Now, you have heard a great deal about section 220, touching undistributed profits. Some years ago the corporations decided to issue stock dividends so that their stockholders could avoid paying these high surtaxes. The great corporations of the country who did not want to distribute the profits paid, up to 1920, according to an estimate, $1,800,000,000 in stock dividends. That was found out by the Federal Trade Commission. That, I believe, was 1918, when we attempted to tax stock dividends; and the Supreme Court held that it would be unconstitutional, and therefore we could not do that. Immediately after that the great corporations of the country issued stock dividends, and now it amounts to $6,500,000,000, and they have issued those stock dividends to avoid taxation. Our committee talked about it many times informally, and the committee wanted to find some provision to prevent these fellows from avoiding and escaping taxation. Therefore the advisory committee of the joint committee on internal-revenue taxation decided on a provision that would do the job, and it was a simple proposition. They said the amount distributed should be taxed a less percentage than the amount not distributed. This joint committee, including Doctor Adams—you have heard their names mentioned here, and they are upright and honorable men, and they know what they are talking about—said in effect, "If you will just tax the undistributed profits 1 or 2 per cent, 10 per cent on the distributed and 12 per cent on the undistributed profits, that would hold out an inducement. If they want the privilege of withholding accumulated surpluses in the corporation for any purpose other than legitimate purposes, let them pay for the privilege. Let us tax them a little more on that which they do not distribute than on that which they distribute. That would get them. That would stop up the hole. Every man in this House knows it, and especially every man on the Committee on Ways and Means knows it.

But what did they do? They had the experts draft a provision to take the place of section 220, and the experts themselves said they drafted it under the supervision of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], the chairman. I think it is better than the present law. But we wanted to find out on the committee whether or not this would stop a gap. I asked Mr. Beaman, our chief expert, whether this would do the job we wanted done; that is, whether it would prevent those fellows from avoiding the tax. He said:

No; there are many ways by which they can get around this.

I do not think it is fair to put in a provision that everybody knows will not do the work. I just wanted to call your attention to that.

I rose, however, mainly to read this letter which I have received from the Civil Service Commission. Everybody knows, and the advisory committee to the joint revenue taxation committee knew, that it would not create a deficit to do what the advisory report advised us to do, but on account of politics they were afraid. You Republicans were afraid you would lose office in some of these States. They were so afraid that some Republicans in Arkansas or in Minnesota or some other State might lose office that they voted unanimously to undo what we had done, and we had done it on the recommendation of the Treasury Department. The Assistant Secretary, Mr. Mills, who is one of the greatest partisans I have ever known in this House, and Mr. Mellon, who is also an intense partisan, advised us to do this thing on account of the efficiency of the service, as they said. Now, I want to read that letter that I have just received from the Civil Service Commission, dated to-day and received by special messenger.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman another minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for another minute.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I read:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1927.

Hon. WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. OLDFIELD: The commission respectfully asks consideration of the following brief statement. If more detailed information is desired, that will be promptly furnished.

On page 8, volume 1, of the report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation is recommendation as to reorganization, especially of the field branches of the Internal Revenue Service. The statement is made in the report that such reorganization would result in saving approximately $2,000,000 per annum. This recommendation is accompanied by the statement, "To accomplish this purpose it will be necessary that all employees in the field service be under the civil service."

It has been demonstrated repeatedly in the Government service, and also in private industry, that the application of the examination system to employment of personnel results in savings in actual expenditures and in bringing about increased efficiency. Instances may be cited, if you desire them.

If favorable action is taken by Congress on this recommendation of the joint committee, it may be stated that the incumbents of positions of deputy collector of internal revenue, which positions are not now classified, will automatically be given a competitive classified status under existing civil service laws and rules, unless Congress specifically provides otherwise.

The commission is most earnest in urging that Congress place the entire tax-collecting agencies of the Government within the purview of the merit system.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully,

JOHN T. DOYLE, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman another minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Certain gentleman on the Ways and Means Committee thought these men were going to lose their positions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. OLDFIELD. But this letter says they would not; that they will be automaticaly put in the classified service; and that their jobs will be secure to them. So there can be no excuse for our not going along and doing the right thing about this matter; that is, placing these gentlemen under civil service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman insert the whole letter?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I have inserted the whole letter.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was it sent to the gentleman at his request?

Mr. OLDFIELD. No. I did not know anything about it and did not know it was to be sent to me at all. It was sent by special messenger. I do not know why they sent it to me, but I presume it was because it was sent to all of the other Members.

Mr. TREADWAY. They probably recognized that the gentleman is such a partisan, as he has just been referring to partisanship.

Mr. OLDFIELD. They know I am not a partisan. If the letter was sent on that ground, it would have been sent to some other gentleman. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], for example.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This is the first time I ever heard that the Civil Service Commission is a partisan body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the report of the joint committee, as well as pamphlet No. 1, being the advisory committee's report. I have had many requests for this pamphlet to-day, but I am not able to supply the copies, so I am asking unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, would it not cover the wishes of the gentleman if additional copies of this report should be printed in a separate volume? I think such an arrangement could be made with the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If that were done Members of the House would not be able to get copies in time, because the copies would have to be distributed through the folding room, and it would take 10 days to do that. We are going to take up this bill under the five-minute rule on Monday next, and if the Members are to have the benefit of the recommendations made by the advisory committee and the staff that has worked on this proposition all summer, the report will have to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so they can look it over. Otherwise the Members will not get the benefit of it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman mean more than Volume I?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I mean Volume I, that little thin pamphlet.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has referred to it as a thin volume, when, as a matter of fact, there are 86 pages in it, together with tables and other matter.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. There are not 86 pages.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am holding it in my hand, sir.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not care what the gentleman is holding in his hand. I will assert there are not 86 pages in that volume.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman can look at it if he questions my word. There is the end of it, and that is page 86.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is not Volume I at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; that is Volume I.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might suggest that it is his offhand opinion that this probably ought to be done in the House rather than in the committee.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This is Volume III. The gentleman did not look at it himself. He is speaking about the entire volume. This is Part III, while I am only asking to have printed in the RECORD the first portion of it, which contains the recommendations.

Mr. TREADWAY. Just the pages covering the recommendation?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is all I am asking, and that will cover about——

Mr. TREADWAY. There are 26 pages of that.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No; 16 pages.

Mr. TREADWAY. Personally I have not the slightest objection to the request other than the matter of expense. We pad the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with such a tremendous lot of useless matter that it seems to me a pity, when the report is available and can be reprinted in any number of copies, to ask that this be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because every page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD means an expense to the Treasury.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will be good enough to send out and get 400 copies of that for the benefit of the membership of the House I will withdraw my request.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will be very glad to see if the chairman of the Printing Committee can not reprint it and have copies available by Monday.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman does not have any copies and can not get them.

Mr. TREADWAY. I know I have no copies and I have no authority to ask for them.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But the gentleman said they were available.

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not say there were 400 copies available.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman said there were available copies for every Member of the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. There are or can be. The gentleman, I am sure, does not want to pad the RECORD any more than I do.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If gentlemen did not print more in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD than I do, the RECORD would be very small, indeed.

Mr. TREADWAY. I know that, and sometimes the gentleman does not print his own speeches.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. All I want is to have the Members of the House secure this information, and I have had so many requests for this information to-day that I think it should be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TREADWAY. The chairman of the committee is now here. I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that if 400 copies of the recommendations of the joint committee are available by Monday he will withdraw his request to have this pamphlet printed in the RECORD. Why not withdraw your request until the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee can consult with the chairman of the Committee on Printing and see whether that can be arranged or not?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will let the gentleman from Massachusetts or the gentleman from Iowa object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I had not intended to speak in general debate on this revenue bill, preferring rather to speak under the five-minute rule on a specific proposal in the form of an amendment.

However, in view of the fact that our able leader on revenue measures, Mr. GARNER of Texas, made reference in his speech yesterday to my proposal, and provoked comment on it, I feel that I ought to take a little time to-day to explain and elaborate the amendment which will be offered at the appropriate time.

The two great parties are not in any keen conflict over this revenue bill. There seems to be no fundamental difference of opinion on any large principle.

There is, however, one point of difference between various groups and interests in the country, and that centers about the Treasury surplus, its probable amount, and its disposition.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman speaks of an amendment which he proposes to offer.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. At the present time I do not know just what that amendment will be.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is why I am here now. I want to explain some of the ideas which I shall embody in an amendment with reference to the corporation income tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was stated yesterday the gentleman proposed that provision should be made by which any further surplus in the Treasury might be used for a further reduction of the rate of the corporation income tax.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Exactly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman, conversely, propose that if the revenue becomes smaller there shall be an increase of the corporation income tax?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I do not, and I shall be very glad to explain that question in due time. I want the Members of the House who are here to know the full import of the recommendation I shall embody in my amendment.

I say the crux of the whole debate, if there is a debate at all on the revenue bill, centers about the question as to what we ought to do with the surplus when it occurs. If there were no surplus, if there were no excess of ordinary receipts over regular expenditures, there would be no question of tax reduction; but in view of the fact that there have been recurring surpluses from year to year, totaling some $2,000,000,000 in the last five or six years, the question always arises, Shall we use the surplus to retire the public debt or shall we use it for tax reduction?

This is a question of principle. This is not a question of political expediency. It is not a question of administration of law, but is a question of fiscal policy.

These estimates of surplus are made 18 months in advance. We are now, for instance, enacting legislation for the fiscal year ending 1929, which is contingent upon the revenues which will be received up to 18 months from the time when these estimates were made. I am not surprised that there are variations in the actual amount received as against the estimated amount predicted in the name of a surplus.

My proposition tries to take the guesswork out of the surplus problem in this way. My amendment will propose that at the close of the fiscal year, June 30 of the next year—1928—if the Treasury finds it has on hand a bookkeeping entry of a sum of money over and above that which it needs for the ordinary running expenses of the Government, then that excess or surplus shall be used for further tax relief for the benefit of a large group of taxpayers. My proposition is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be directed by this Congress to use at least some of that surplus in a further reduction of the corporation income tax.

I will explain later why I confine it to the corporation income tax; but first let me make this clear. If the Treasurer has more money than he needs to pay the running expenses of the Government, to whom should that money go? What shall he do with it? At the present time he can do only one of two things with it. He can either retire some of the indebtedness of our floating debt or retire some of our public debt beyond the requirements of our statutory provisions.

The Secretary of the Treasury did exactly what any one of us would have done under such circumstances. He used the money to retire the public debt because he was not directed to use it in any other way. Now, all my amendment proposes to do is to direct him to give some of it back to the taxpayers from whom he collected it. If the size of the surplus warrants it, the Secretary of the Treasury will be directed to reduce the tax on corporation income which will fall due at the two subsequent quarterly periods following June 30—namely, September 15 and December 15. So that if the corporation income-tax rate were thus reduced by virtue of a Treasury surplus, the corporations which began to pay at the rate of 11½ per cent—if the pending bill becomes a law—and have paid on the basis of 11½ per cent on March 15 and June 15, would pay on a lower rate on the payment dates September 15 and December 15. There is no guess work about it. The tax will not be based upon an esitmate, but will be based upon the actual amount of surplus in hand on the Treasury books on June 30, 1928, which is the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. At what time?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. At the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1928.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the finances of the Treasury Department are not handled in that way.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; they are handled in just that way. On June 30 the Secretary of the Treasury will announce to the country that the surplus for the fiscal year was a certain amount, when the books were closed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then each quarter, instead of the Secretary retiring outstanding indebtedness as he does now, you would hold that in abeyance?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. No; not necessarily. That is a banking or financing operation which I would like to explain after I get through explaining the provisions of my amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That balance at the end of the fiscal year on June 30, of course, is only the book balance.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Exactly; that is why I distinguished that from a current financing operation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And during the course of the year the Government is constantly financing its operations by short-term loans.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I understand that to be the case; yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And when there is money enough in the Treasury so they do not need to negotiate a short-term loan, they simply desist from borrowing, and in that way the money is applied upon the indebtedness.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I understand that to be the case, and my proposal would not change this procedure.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So at no time is the money in the Treasury.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. When I speak of surplus I do not mean cash, if that is what the gentleman has in mind.

The daily report of the Treasury Department two days ago announced it had only $20,000,000 on hand, but the surplus for the year is estimated to be $455,000,000. The point is that this estimated "surplus," $455,000,000, is used as a basis for reducing taxes. But what will happen if the estimated surplus turns out to be not that figure but $555,000,000? Unless the law makes specific provision as to what shall be done, the Secretary of the Treasury will again proceed to reduce the public debt or the floating debt. You are going to reduce taxes; why not reduce them all you can?

If we thought we had enough money on hand to reduce the corporation tax to 10 per cent, would not the administration do it? The implication is that it would. The answer given by the Secretary of the Treasury to the United States Chamber of Commerce is that we can not reduce the corporation tax further because the surplus will not be large enough to permit it. When I say surplus I mean the actual bookkeeping surplus not cash on hand. If the Secretary of the Treasury has faith in his own estimates, he ought not to oppose my proposal, since there would be no further surplus to distribute. If those who seek a larger tax reduction think Mr. Mellon may be mistaken and that a greater surplus may be available, then these people should welcome an opportunity such as my amendment affords.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is not quite what the Treasury says. The Treasury says the permanent surplus will not permit—that is, the surplus on ordinary receipts—not on the nonrecurrent receipts.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Whatever enters into the surplus, whatever the method of calculation used by Mr. Mellon in arriving at the $455,000,000, I assume will continue to be the method used up to the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1928, and again in 1929.

If what I say is true, that there is a difference of opinion in this country as to what we ought to do with the surplus, the solution lies, at least in a degree, in the amendment I shall propose.

The Congress of the United States directs the Treasurer of the United States how to use that surplus. I do not see how the Treasurer of the United States can object to it. When he has more money than he needs, why should he not give it back to the taxpayers? If the taxpayers are insisting on a larger reduction than the Treasury can afford to give them, of course they should not have it. So the tax reduction would depend on the state of the finances at the close of the fiscal year on June 30, 1928, or June 30, 1929.

For instance, if after allowing for a safety margin of, say, $50,000,000, the Treasurer has $25,000,000 more than he needs for all ordinary operations of government, then the corporation tax drops to 11¼ per cent. If he has $50,000,000 more than he needs, the tax will drop to 11 per cent. I propose to have a sliding scale, a graduated corporation tax from 11½ per cent down to 10 per cent, but never to go lower than 10 per cent. If the Treasury situation permits it the corporations ought to be given this reduction down to 10 per cent, but not lower.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not see how the gentleman figures that. The Treasurer would have to have the money on hand at the end of the fiscal year if he is going to do that. If he does not hold that at the end of the first quarter he will not have it at the end of the year.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. There are two things involved in the gentleman's question. Let us assume that an error was made of an underestimate of $100,000,000 and suppose the surplus is $555,000,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury has $100,000,000 to apply to tax reduction. He can retire the floating indebtedness, he can apply it to the public debt, or he can apply it on tax reduction. He does not have to go into the Treasury and take out the money. When the quarterly returns are due, say, in September, he notifies the corporations that instead of paying on a basis of 11½ per cent, they will have to pay on the newly announced rate of, say, 10½ per cent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would result in holding the surplus of the first quarter for six months.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. No; it is a very simple operation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not a simple operation.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think it could be done. The Treasurer would not need to lose one penny of interest. He goes into the market and buys certificates when he has a surplus and refinances the operation in order to prepare for the new situation created by the lower tax rate on corporation incomes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I will.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. He would not need to lose a cent of interest, because he could turn it over into United States bonds. But let me ask the gentleman a question while I am on my feet. If we had a permanent system of taxation in this country satisfactory to the entire Nation and we had an automatic scale such as the gentleman speaks of—say he had $50,000,000 surplus, could not he give notice that he was going to collect on a basis of a $50,000,000 surplus in December? In other words, the tax would go up or come down according to the state of the Treasury.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes. And that principle of elasticity is actually in operation in my State.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It is in my own State of Texas.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. In my State the tax rate on general property is levied in accordance with the needs of the government within certain limits. The only difference is that in my proposal I apply the tax rate retroactively.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But that is made up in advance.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; and this proposition of mine is better. My proposition has no guesswork in it. If you make it up in advance it has to have an element of guesswork. You could go wrong then, but under my proposition you can not go wrong.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You could not go right because you would lose the interest on it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I hope that is the gentleman's only objection to my plan, for his objection can be met. It is not a valid objection, I contend.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not the only objection.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. It is the only one the gentleman has raised. If at the close of the calendar year I have more money in my corporation than is needed to pay expenses I can issue more dividends. That is what is done in private business and that is all I am asking for in the Government financial policy. I am asking the Congress of the United States to lay down a fiscal policy which is absolutely sound, a policy which says that we will give back to the taxpayers that which we do not need, instead of allowing the Treasury Department to use its own discretion as to its disposition.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. What is the gentleman's idea? Does he contemplate that the present rates of taxation are perfect and should remain at their present figures, either now or when the new bill is passed? Why should this be given to the corporations?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think I have a good reason for limiting this proposition to the corporation tax, and perhaps I had better explain that now, since two gentlemen have asked that question. In the first place, I am interested in getting the Congress to see the need of such a policy, and its operation becomes simpler if I confine it to one source of revenue. If I try to cover all taxes, then it will become very much involved, and you would get up against the question of the refund. Take the question of the automobile tax. Who would get the refund on an automobile tax? Understand, that under the pending bill the tax is retroactive for the calendar year 1927 on the corporation income tax. Let us say that a man bought a Ford or a Chevrolet last year and he had to pay the tax on it. The tax was paid in the first instance by the company, but it was paid actually by the man who bought the automobile. The refund would have to be made to the man who sold the automobile, because he paid the tax to the Government. Is that man going to look for the man who bought the automobile from him? I doubt it. You could not require that by law, and therefore it is not fair to refund excise taxes to the manufacturer which have already been passed on to the consumer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the gentleman is stating the case wrongly. We are not making the automobile tax retroactive.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I understand that, and I say that is why I can not apply my flexible sliding scale tax proposal to the excise tax; but it can be applied to the corporation tax. You can not recover an excise tax which has already been paid and passed on to the consumer, but in the case of a stockholder in a corporation, it is quite different. If any of you gentlemen own any stock in a corporation, your corporation will at the close of this year get a bill from the Secretary of the Treasury calling for a certain tax by June 30, 1928. How much of a tax should you pay? Under the pending bill your corporation would pay 11½ per cent. My proposal is that it should pay anywhere from 11½ per cent to 10 per cent, depending on the size of the "surplus" at the close of the fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman give me a few minutes more?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will five minutes do the gentleman?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I highly value the gentleman's opinion as a financier and an authority on economics. Can the gentleman justify his position? I may vote for a reduction of the tax on corporations. Can the gentleman justify his position in reducing the corporation tax to, say, 10 per cent—and I am not against corporations—and leave the exemption to the head of a family at only $3,500, when the head of a family must educate his children and provide a living at the present high cost of living. There are corporations in my district where they just stick a pick in the soil and get oil, and drill down a thousand feet and get thousands of barrels of oil a day. Can the gentleman justify reducing the corporation tax to 10 per cent and leaving exemption for the head of a family at only $3,500?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think so. The gentleman raises a very pertinent question. The question is, If we had a surplus, which we know we could anticipate with absolute certainty, then there might be a debatable question as to whether or not you ought not to raise further the exemption to married men; and I advocated an exemption to cover hospital and doctor bills for married men, but the committee turned that down two years ago. The surplus being an uncertain factor——

Mr. HUDSPETH. But the gentleman is going to make it certain when it reaches a certain amount.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The facts are that we eliminated from the tax rolls over 2,000,000 taxpayers by our 1926 act. If we increase the exemptions still further, we reduce the tax-paying list to such a narrow base that it endangers the very foundation of the income-tax structure. I believe Mr. Mills, now Undersecretary of the Treasury, was right when he said on the floor of this House that we may destroy the very structure of our income tax in the United States if we push the exemption too far.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does the gentleman think that the exemption for married men should stand at $3,500 as it is in this bill?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. We must get out of our heads the idea that when we reduce the corporation tax we are reducing taxes for a few people. We used to have the idea that a reduction of the corporation tax benefited only a few people. I want the gentleman to listen to some telegrams which I just got to-day.

In my home city of Rochester, N. Y., is one corporation which has 10,000 stockholders in that city alone. Then there is another corporation that has over 12,000 stockholders. So you have there 22,000 stockholders, and that is an answer to the gentleman's question. If you reduce the corporation tax to 10 per cent, you spread the benefit of tax reduction to a large number of people without endangering the permanent structure of our income-tax system. The reduction of the corporation tax is affecting the average man to-day as never before in the history of the country because of the wide distribution of wealth through the medium of stock ownership. One of the most important economic developments in the last few years is this wide distribution of wealth throughout the country through stock ownership. The corporation has become an agency for the distribution of wealth and national income. Do not let anyone frighten you by the idea that when you talk about the reduction of corporation tax, you are doing it for the rich. We are doing it for the average man—for all classes—since all classes are rapidly becoming—indeed have become—stockholders.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But you are doing it for a great many rich corporations.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. But you are also benefiting the rank and file of the people who have now become stockholders to the extent of 3,000,000 people in the United States. There are more people in the United States paying income taxes as stockholders in corporations than are paying taxes on the individual income basis. For this reason I believe the committee very wisely directed its tax reduction to the field of the corporation income tax.

My estimate is that 75 per cent of the aggregate reduction—that is, 75 per cent of $232,735,000—goes to the stockholders of corporations. It goes to 3,000,000 people. I think it is a good bill, and I am going to vote for it. But while I think it is a good bill, I want to make it a better bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman agrees with the theory of the Ways and Means Committee in drafting the bill.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I agree; absolutely. When the taxes are reduced they will flow back or be allowed to remain in the pockets of the stockholders. That is why I want to reduce the tax on corporations still further if the surplus warrants it. I am glad, of course, the automobile tax is being cut in half—from 3 per cent to 1½ per cent.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I will.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. How does the gentleman justify the reduction he contemplates when we still have outstanding a quantity of short-time indebtedness, which could be paid out of the surplus. Is there not an enormous amount of short-time indebtedness which we could pay from the surplus and which the Secretary of the Treasury does pay?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The gentleman has raised the question I began with. Why not use the surplus to retire these loans? If we had done that we would have had no tax reductions in the last five years. Two billion dollars could be applied to the reduction of the public debt if he chooses to do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas inquired about the report of the joint committee. I have just made arrangements with Mr. Brown, the clerk of the joint committee, who will put in each Member's post-office box a copy of this report this evening.

Mr. GARNER of .Texas. That will be very satisfactory, because they can get the information in there for which various Members of the House have been asking.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How will we get it?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. In all the post-office boxes this afternoon.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, before beginning a discussion of the various features of this bill, I want to stop a moment to refer to the very able presentation made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN]. I do not know in what respect his proposal differs from that which was made some years ago, tentatively, by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who, at one time at least, suggested the consideration of a system by which tax reduction might be automatic and dependent upon conditions of the Treasury from time to time. It seems to me, however, if we base such a system upon our experience in reference to local taxation, we are likely to fall into error. In all the States, I think, State, county, and municipal taxes are predicated upon the revenue needs of the various taxing bodies levying the tax or adopting resolutions which determine the amount of tax or revenues which they will need for a given year, and thereupon some official or some governmental agency, frequently a county clerk in our western communities, takes all of these tax levies, computes them, and fixes the tax rate upon the valuations which have been made upon property, real and personal, by the assessing authorities. But there you have an annual budget and an annual valuation of property which is to be assessed. In other words, on the one hand you have the amount of revenue, the amount of money, that will be needed for the purposes of the various governments included in the levy, and on the other hand you have an annual valuation of the property, personal or real, which is to be subject to the tax, and all that the county clerk, or whoever the officer may be who determines the amount of the tax, has to do is to compare the amount of revenue needed with the valuation of the property assessed and determine upon the rate of taxation or assessment.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The total tax levied at the end of the fiscal year and the total surplus, one divided by the other, gives the rate per dollar of taxation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But we have this difficulty, I will say to the gentleman, that when we come to the Congress of the United States that Congress will not, and should not, delegate to anybody else to determine, first, how much money shall be expended, and secondly, what shall be the rate of taxation. I do not think we are willing to delegate the methods by which money shall be raised—certainly not without a great deal of discussion and consideration—nor do I think the Congress will be willing to delegate to an administrative officer the authority to levy an additional tax or to reduce the tax already fixed by the Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does that reason apply to the flexible tariff?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, the flexible tariff is based upon a different theory. It is based upon the difference in the cost of production here and abroad and on the changing conditions attending production.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is delegating the say-so or the decision to some one other than Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; it is delegating to some one else the ascertainment of facts.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This does not delegate anything whatever to the Secretary of the Treasury. It says if the money is there on the 1st day of July, he shall take off so much tax, or levy so much tax, as the case may be. He has no discretion in the premises, whereas in a flexible tariff the ascertainment of the fact is imposed on the Executive instead of on the Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not admit that is an analogous case, although, of course, it is injected here for purposes of argument.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I think the corporations are like Joseph when he was given the coat of many colors. But what I want to ask is: Did the committee consider the advisability or feasibility of substituting the graduated tax for the flat tax that has been in operation and which this bill retains?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. The committee considered it this time, although it had been considered many times before. But that raises a question which is involved in the excess-profits taxation, namely, the valuation of the capital assets of a corporation.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman will be given an opportunity to vote for a graduated tax. It is based on the same principle as the corporation tax; that is, the net income for the taxable year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The corporation that has a capitalization of $100,000 and an income of $25,000 will be taxed on exactly the same basis as a corporation having a capitalization of $1,000,000 and a net income of only $25,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. If there is anything on earth that is going to differentiate this side—the Democratic side—from that side—the Republican side—on the corporation tax, it is contained in the suggestion of the lamented Claude Kitchin, namely, that relief be given 375 corporations which are barely getting on while the remaining 25,000, or a few more, are enjoying big returns.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I shall be very glad to give attention to that matter when we come to the discussion of that section of the bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. I suggest that if we give them a little more time they may hand us what we expect, something to show that the corporation tax is not passed on to the consumer. Before we take off the tax on the corporation let us see that they hand the relief on to the consumer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, this matter of tax reduction is a subject that is in the public mind and properly receives large attention on the part of the House and on the part of the people of the country. Still tax reduction is not the important matter in the bill that is before the House to-day.

The important matters in this bill relate to the administration of the law. I hope they will receive consideration during the reading of the bill.

This is the fourth revenue bill which has been presented to the Congress since the termination of the war and during my term of office here. The previous bills were largely for the purpose of tax reduction. The acts of 1921, 1924, and 1926 made a total tax reduction of $1,529,000,000. It happens that we at this time have a surplus which we think can only be safely estimated at approximately $225,000,000, and we are able to use that surplus for the purpose of tax reduction. But this surplus is not sufficient at this time to warrant the adoption of an ideal system of taxation. I had been dreaming and hoping that when we came to a revision of the internal revenue laws at this time it might be possible to evolve an ideal and permanent system of Federal taxation. I was hoping that we might determine definitely whether we should continue the excise taxes and the sales taxes and taxes of that special character——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does it relate to this particular matter?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes. The gentleman said he had been dreaming. I wonder if he had been dreaming about those who are heads of families, most of them?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. I think the biggest mistake this Congress ever made was when it raised the exemption to heads of families to $3,500.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not think the gentleman is correct on that. Do you want to reduce it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; not now. I would not hesitate to reduce it, however, under certain conditions.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman is willing to remit taxes from the big oil companies and other big corporations and still leave the tax on the heads of families?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The surtaxes are not paid by the masses of the people.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But they are paid indirectly by the masses of the people.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it would be well that every man with a substantial income should pay something to the support of the Government. I think if we had stopped at $3,000 the last time in the matter of exemption for the heads of families we might be able to do something in the way of tax reduction that we would like to do now.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I know the gentleman would like to follow the leaders. But if they would give us the reduction that a married man should have in the case of sickness and misfortune we would be satisfied. Will the gentleman explain why these deductions should not be allowed? I would be very glad to hear him.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As to deductions it always becomes a matter of opinion whether deductions as claimed should be allowed, and it becomes a matter of continually auditing the returns. The committee believes it is better to make a flat reduction and make that uniform than to leave it dependent on conditions as they arise.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is it a matter of opinion whether a man was operated on or not, or whether his wife had died and was buried, and whether a man had been in the hospital for a month? Would there be any doubt or uncertainty about that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That depends on what standard a man would follow in the employment of a physician or a surgeon. One surgeon might charge a man a thousand dollars for an operation and another surgeon might charge him only $50. In the matter of burial expenses I want to suggest to my friend that there may be a great many differences of opinion as to what are proper expenses in the conduct of a funeral. Besides, the present high exemptions are designed to cover contingencies of this kind.

Now, I do not want to be diverted by everybody——

Mr. HUDSPETH. How much money do you hand back to corporations?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The reduction for corporations is $178,000,000 out of the $236,000,000 carried in this bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Most of it goes back to the corporations?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then the gentleman says he does not believe the exemption should be extended to $3,500 to the head of a family?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not believe we should now raise it beyond the $3,500. I will say this to the gentleman. If the gentleman will read the remarks I made when we passed the last bill, he will find I said I thought $3,500 went too far. But we are now discussing this bill. One hundred and seventy-eight million dollars of these reductions go to the corporations. The other $58,000,000 go to the special taxes, the excise and sales taxes of various kinds.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And the gentlemen in the lower brackets get nothing out of this bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What does the gentleman mean by gentlemen in the lower brackets?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I mean men who are heads of families and who are in what we call the lower brackets. They get no reduction, but it stands as it has stood at $3,500 and the corporations get $178,000,000? That is the bill, is it not?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This bill does not touch the matter of the exemption of the individual.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is what I am objecting to. I think it should touch him, and I belong to a few corporations myself.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The question before the committee was whether at this time the $225,000,000 available for surplus should be applied upon one of two classes or upon both. Of course, the gentleman brings in an entirely new element. He would go back now and revise the individual income-tax rate, but that was not the design of the committee.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Did the committee consider the matter of applying this money upon the floating indebtedness of the Government rather than to tax reductions? Was that considered?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The committee determined to proceed to the preparation of a bill which would provide for a reduction in taxation not to exceed $250,000,000.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Rather than to apply that $250,000,000 upon the indebtedness of the country.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, if the committee had determined to apply the surplus to the payment of the debt of the United States, of course there would not be any tax reduction bill before the House.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But the committee did not report a bill providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should apply the money to the indebtedness of the country.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That would not be necessary. I will state to the gentleman, as I stated to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] a moment ago, that that process is automatic, it is self-operating. When money comes into the Treasury and certificates of indebtedness become due it is a question whether the Treasury Department will use the money thus on hand for the purpose of paying such loans or will borrow new money and issue new certificates instead of them; and if the money is available it is, of course, used and automatically operates toward tax reduction.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question as to the admission tax?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I had not intended to come to that; but what is the question?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I notice in subdivision 1 that—

A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription—

And so forth.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we take up these separate matters when we come to them in the bill. That will be the much better way.

It has already been suggested that the bill gives three-fourths of the tax reduction to the corporations. Let me say one word about the corporations. A corporation is more or less of a fiction. It is merely a piece of machinery. It is merely a legal entity by which business is conducted. It consists of nothing but its stockholders. There seems to be an idea that something is being presented to the corporations. Who are the corporations? Nothing but the stockholders. When you reduce the tax on a corporation's income from thirteen and a half per cent to eleven and a half per cent, as the committee recommends, making a total reduction of $166,000,000, that money will go to the men and women who own the stock in the corporation. It does not benefit the corporation itself. It benefits the stockholders in the corporation.

In addition to the 2 per cent reduction, we have increased the exemption for corporations which have an income of $25,000 or less, from $2,000 to $3,000, and that creates a loss in the Treasury of $12,000,000. The effect of that provision will be that with a rate of 11½ per cent each corporation in that class will have a flat reduction of $115 in its tax.

I said a moment ago that our individual income tax has become a class tax and is no longer a popular tax. Less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of our entire population now pay more than 95 per cent of the total individual income taxes, and 97.8 per cent of the people pay no Federal individual income tax whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the chairman of the committee, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. When the gentleman gives these figures and percentages, does he include the number of stockholders in corporations that are paying the tax through the corporations or only individual taxpayers?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am including the individuals who pay the individual income tax. Of course, these same individuals, or most of them, pay the surtax upon the incomes of corporations that comes to them. These same individuals, also, being stockholders, through the corporations, pay 13½ per cent, which is now in force, upon the income of their corporations.

The Federal tax structure, so far as internal-revenue taxes are concerned, may be divided about as follows:

About $545,000,000 is collected annually upon excise and sales taxes, what we ordinarily call special taxes and sometimes nuisance taxes. That includes the tax on the manufactures of tobacco, which are by far the largest source of the income of our internal-revenue system and amounts to $376,000,000. It includes the tax on cigars, cigarettes, tobacco, and snuff.

The individual income tax yields approximately $912,000,000. The corporation income tax yields about $1,308,000,000, and the estate tax about $100,000,000.

For some reason, when we made the previous reductions in taxes, principally on the incomes of individuals, no great attention was given to the matter of the income tax upon corporations. There is a reason for it, of course. The more urgent need was to bring the tax upon individual incomes down to a basis where they not only would no longer be burdensome to the individuals who pay these taxes, but where the reduction of the taxes would improve our economic and financial conditions, and the results which have been obtained have shown conclusively that the reductions that were made brought the Government larger income by reason of the reduced taxes.

So far as the corporations are concerned, it is doubtful whether approximately the same result will be attained in the case of the reduction of their tax rates, because the corporations do not furnish the amount of capital for investment which is furnished by the individual whose tax rates are reduced.

I might say something with reference to the time for the application of the reduction of the corporation tax.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he figures that three-tenths of 1 per cent of the population pay income taxes?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of our population now pay more than 95 per cent of the total individual income taxes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does that carry the implication that the wealth of this country is controlled by less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of the population of our country?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not carrying any implication with the statement. I am simply stating the fact.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Do not the figures of the gentleman carry that implication?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am simply stating the figures.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Would that cause anyone to believe that there is a wise and healthy distribution of the wealth of the country?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Ninety-seven and eight-tenths per cent of the people pay no individual income tax whatever.

The committee recommends that the reduction of the corporation income tax shall become effective for the income for the year 1927.

One hears a great deal of argument as to whether the tax of a corporation is passed on. It seems to me the reply to that question may be made in this wise: A corporation at the beginning of the year no doubt makes an effort to strike a balance, to make a budget of its incomes and expenditures, and probably will try to include in that budget the amounts which it is required to pay for taxes; but very soon after the beginning of the year a corporation which attempted to run its business upon that basis would discover that the price which it was receiving for the goods it produced or sold was not determined by its budget, was not determined by its balance sheet, but was determined by the conditions of business, by the competition which it encountered in the sale of its goods, by the condition of the money market, by the exchange rate in the banks, and by the general prosperity of the people of the United States. I think it is futile to argue that it is possible for any corporation in advance to pass on its taxes to the consumers who purchase its goods or who deal with it, whatever its operations may be.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The gentleman, of course, would not include in that statement monopolies.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I would not include monopolies, because they can in some cases fix their own prices.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Therefore they can pass the tax along to the consumer. I do not mean that they necessarily do that, but they are in a position where they may do that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They can do it, but, of course, they have other conditions to meet. They must make their sales popular.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. This really protects the gentleman's statement. The gentleman did not want this to apply to all corporations.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I am not applying it to a monopoly. One does not have to be an economist to realize that the monopolies might possibly pass on the tax.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. This is reaching back into the very interesting portion of the gentleman's address which we hoped to hear. If there is any justification for the income tax, or rather the good thing about the tax, it is that they can not pass it on. It is a tax on the profits in the case of public utilities, for instance, and not a fixed charge on the running of that business. Much as one might like to talk against the tax, I think we ought to justify it in that way more than any other—it can not be passed on.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman suggests, to my mind, some of the correspondence which we have had during recent months. We get letters from people who object to every form of taxation. I have had the most violent abuse of the income-tax system, in correspondence recently, that I have ever seen, and still I conceive there is no fairer tax in the world than a tax upon the income of the individual or of a corporation.

We have had taxes upon nearly every form of activity; and money must be raised for the needs of the Government. The Congress in the exercise of the duty which is imposed upon it must seek to place taxation upon as equitable a basis as possible.

No taxing system will ever be perfect. We can never arrive at a situation where we do exact justice. We will be fortunate if we do approximate justice; and the committee considered how this tax reduction should be applied, whether it should be given to the corporations, whether any of it should be given to the individual taxpayers who got practically all the reduction in prior years, or whether it should be given to those people who are paying these special taxes—sales taxes and excise taxes—and at the same time are themselves subject to the income-tax schedules. The committee after much discussion and deliberation concluded, there being only a limited amount of surplus available, to try to apply the surplus pretty generally throughout the entire scope of taxation and to give the reductions to classes of taxpayers who had received less benefit or practically no benefit from the previous laws; and while Members of the House, of course, will be importuned to support this proposition and that, if we are going to support them all, or if we are going to support any of them, we will eventually find ourselves with a tax bill which will go way beyond the available resources and the available surplus of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the bill now pending does not raise any very fundamental questions; it does bring to our attention in a general way the entire field of taxation, expenditure, and debt.

In 1926 the total tax revenues of the Federal, State, and local governments were $8,500,000,000. The total expenditures of the Federal, State, and local governments for the fiscal year 1925 were $11,124,000,000. The total indebtedness of the Federal, State, and local governments is around $32,000,000,000. The Federal, State, and local governments should cooperate to make equitable these aggregate burdens common to 118,000,000 people. During the present period there is a singular difference between the methods of financing by the States and the Federal Government which is very noticeable. We would hesitate long at Washington, for instance, before deliberately creating a deficit in current receipts and expenditures. The States and localities, on the other hand, are deliberately issuing many hundred millions of dollars of bonds or notes each year to supplement their tax revenues and other treasury receipts. This, however, is mainly for long-delayed road construction and other urgent needs.

I think an unfortunate trend of public sentiment during recent years in regard to taxes is the growing dislike, not to say hate, on the part of the taxpayer with respect to the payment of any kind of tax. Many or most citizens have fallen into a state of mind which causes them to look upon taxes almost as they would look upon blood money. And yet, Mr. Chairman, no expenditure of the citizen, no contribution he can possibly make, assuming that it is judiciously expended, brings back to him more valuable and lasting benefits and blessings than the tax he pays to his Government—Federal, State, and local. [Applause.] I think those in the public service would render valuable service to the country if on suitable occasions they would recount before the people some of the manifold benefits that come back immediately to the taxpayer in return for his taxes. Sad to say, most citizens rarely think of taxes in terms of their benefits and blessings, but only with a view to secure their reduction or their shifting to the shoulders of other classes of taxpayers, regardless of equity or ability to pay.

Until recently, at least, we were spending around 49 per cent of State and local revenues for education and construction and maintenance of public highways. Who would begrudge the payment of taxes for these invaluable and indispensable purposes? We expend $439,000,000 for the protection of the person and property. Every dollar that goes into this expenditure for the protection of person and property—for police, fire protection, for local militia, and those other wonderful agencies that guarantee the security of the person and the family and the property of the American people—yields benefits that are incalculable. We expend $216,000,000 for health and sanitation. Suppose every citizen was obliged to bear the expense of protecting himself and family from contagious diseases, from impure food due to lack of public inspection, and to maintain all those other safeguards that protect the health and sanitation of the American people to-day, his expenses would be staggering compared with his taxes. We expend for charity in hospitals $303,000,000. That money goes to take care of the sick, the feeble, the insane, and the helpless. What taxpayer could be so miserly as to begrudge any of this tax money? These are only a few illustrations of the astonishing benefits and advantages that should not be forgotten by us when we come to pay taxes.

May I for a moment call attention to the genesis of the trouble we are now experiencing about the adjustment downward of the corporation tax rates as I see it? In February, 1919, the peak of the war-tax levies was deliberately fixed at an estimated yield of $6,000,000,000, based primarily on the calendar year 1918. For 1919 and subsequent years this level of war taxes was lowered to an estimated amount of $4,000,000,000. In 1921 there was a general movement over the country to substitute a sales tax for most of the graduated rates of the income tax and for the entire Federal inheritance tax. The question of normal tax reduction on corporations was not seriously pressed at this time, but the fight was waged to repeal the excess-profits tax on corporations. The outcome was the revenue act of 1921, which repealed the excess-profits provisions and increased the normal tax on corporations to 12½ per cent, from which it had been reduced to 10 per cent for the years 1919 and following. The capital-stock tax of 1 per cent also remained.

Following this relief from the excess-profits tax, the large stockholders of corporations decided that they preferred to wage their next fight to reduce their individual surtax, leaving undisturbed the normal tax of 12½ per cent on corporations. This movement culminated in the act of 1926, granting large surtax reductions. The result has been that most all other classes of taxpayers have secured all in the way of tax reductions they were not ashamed to ask for, while the normal tax on corporations has been shoved along in front without reduction. We are now about to adopt a permanent peace level of taxation, and the corporations are finding real difficulty on account of revenue demands in securing reductions of the normal rate to what many or most people might consider a permanent peace level. We are even retaining some war hangover taxes in response to the Treasury's demands for adequate peace-time revenue.

There is, of course, room for unlimited discussion as to how soon after a war taxation should be placed on a permanent peace level—that is to say, how soon will the Government be content to allow the sinking fund and other earmarked receipts to take care of the public debt and proceed to fix the tax rates with respect to current expenditures? I recall that after the Civil War the taxes were brought down to what was considered a peace level within some 9 or 10 years following the war. We were then able to pay off the public debt, except that portion needed for banking purposes, within a period of 20 years after the Civil War. I think the time is practically here when we should undertake to reach a level of what we might call normal taxation—that is, rates of taxation which applied to the average business year would yield the necessary amount of revenue to pay the current expenses of the Government. We at present start the fiscal year in with a working balance in the Treasury of around $212,000,000. We might well figure on an excess of ordinary receipts over ordinary expenses chargeable against ordinary receipts of, say, $50,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year. Then that amount, together with any sporadic or nonrecurring receipts that may come into the Treasury, could be applied on the public debt in addition to the sinking fund and other items specially provided by law, and in addition, whenever a business year becomes more prosperous than normal years, the swollen receipts that are swept into the Treasury under our permanent stable level of taxation in excess of current expenditures would properly go in payment of the public debt in addition to the sinking fund.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that would be a very proper policy, as it would provide for the payment of the debt in years when we were prosperous.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. That is the way an individual deals with his indebtedness.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the way an individual regulates his business.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to one phase of the tax situation before I undertake a few minutes comment on the conditions of our debt and expenditures. I read from a well-known college authority:

> As administered to-day the general property tax is a social and economic scourge which is striking at the foundations of the American home and American agricultural life. The dishonesty, injustice, and innumerable other evils which inevitably attend the general property tax have led one State after another to adopt newer and sounder types of taxation.

We have in bonds and notes alone—omitting stocks of $76,000,000,000 valued at $93,000,000,000 in 1925—around $115,000,000,000 of intangible personalty in this country. The report of the Federal estate tax bureau shows that 65 per cent of the property comprising large estates consists of these and similar intangibles which manifestly escape taxation in whole or in large part during the life of the decedent. There are two ways—and only two ways as I see it—by which these billions of intangibles can be reached for adequate taxation, and that is through the agency of income and inheritance tax methods.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am profoundly interested and admire the gentleman so much, I am sure that if he knew how much I did——

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am very glad that I yielded.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to ask the gentleman, because he condemns the general tax theory so thoroughly, this question. The income-tax theory has been applied in New York, 1 per cent on $10,000, 2 per cent on $20,000, 3 per cent on $50,000, and taken away absolutely from the assessors. Would the gentleman apply the income tax to relieve all this wealth from taxation, as they have done in the city of New York?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, two years ago I addressed the House and undertook then to set out in detail what I conceived to be a good, modernized system of taxation, Federal, State, county, and municipal, and not having the time now to enter into a discussion of the details with the gentleman, I would respectfully refer him to that address, if he would do me the honor to read it. Collection at the source as in England will solve the particular trouble about which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. GIFFORD. I followed the statements of the gentleman very carefully in the hearings, as they relate to his efforts to bring about uniformity in estate taxation by holding on to Federal taxes. I hope that he will say something about some effort that might be made by the Federal Government to have some uniformity in the income tax in the States, before he condemns what Ohio, Illinois, and most of the States still hold onto—the general property tax.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I dealt liberally with that point two years ago, and I would gladly repeat it if I had the time now. My view is that this estate-tax controversy really raises the question of whether one favors the principle of estate taxation to the extent of a substantial levy in this country. If one has this view it would be most inconsistent, while most of the States are striving for uniformity and to succeed need all the aid possible—it would be most inconsistent to deny them the temporary uniformity afforded by the present Federal law, which they so urgently need.

I shall not discuss at any length the question of whether corporation income taxes are shifted or passed on. Most all economic authorities hold that in normal conditions income taxes are not shifted to any important extent. Unlike gross sales or general property taxes, which must be paid whether a concern has derived a profit or suffered a loss at the end of the year, and which enter into the cost of production, the income tax only accrues in the event of profits and is measured by the profits, which are not ascertainable until the end of the year.

It is true that during abnormal business conditions it is possible to visualize earnings which one can with plausibility construe as either profits or taxes that are being passed on. The raising, lowering, or repeal of income-tax rates, on the contrary, does not result in any appreciable raising or lowering of prices to the American people. The law of supply and demand and other considerations govern, as a rule. Business seeks the maximum amount of profits consistent with the maximum amount of business, tax or no tax.

But I did not rise, Mr. Chairman, to discuss in any detail the income-tax situation. I did this two years ago. I do wish to emphasize the belief, however, that during the next few years there will come another fight on both the graduated income and inheritance tax systems, very much as the fight was waged in 1921. If we desire to promote and maintain equitable taxation in this country I warn the friends of these two tax methods to be on their guard. We are even now passing through the throes of what is equivalent to a second deadly assault on the principle of inheritance taxation. The chief line of division of political opinion on internal taxation involves the question of graduated income taxes and substantial inheritance taxation with reasonably graduated rates. May I also say that there can be no fair equitable tax reduction at present unless our exorbitant, iniquitous, and embargo tariff taxes are included.

Some Republican leaders are constantly endeavoring to so represent and dramatize reduction of taxes, expenditures, and debt since the World War as to secure much-hoped-for political favor. In order to keep the official records entirely straight, I shall offer certain facts and figures relating to these phases of taxes, expenditures, and debt in order that both credit and blame may be properly placed: Internal taxes, as stated, were reduced from the war peak of $6,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 by the Democratic Congress in February, 1919. The so-called tax reduction acts of 1921, 1924, and 1926 effected tax reductions in the estimated amount of $1,604,000,000. The Harding and Coolidge administrations at the same time imposed tariff tax increases of $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. And furthermore, a matter that is very important to the taxpaying public is the fact that the reduction of the Federal tax burdens since 1921 has been more apparent than real; theoretical rather than actual.

The full figures reveal the aggregate amount of tax revenues, including customs, that have gone into the Treasury each fiscal year, beginning with 1922 and ending with 1927, as follows:

Fiscal year:
1922	$3,569,000,000
1923	3,186,000,000
1924	3,340,000,000
1925	3,196,000,000
1926	3,417,000,000
1927	3,474,000,000

It appears from the official figures on tax receipts that the level of taxes for 1927—the end of the past six-year period—is $3,474,000,000, as compared with the similar level in 1922 of $3,569,000,000, or an actual as distinguished from a theoretical reduction of $95,000,000. The country, doped almost to death as it has been during the past seven years with propaganda about economy and tax reduction, has in mind an entirely different picture of the relative volume of taxes collected the past year as compared with that of six years ago. What has really happened since 1922 was that the corporation profits in this country declined from $10,700,000,000 in 1917, the highest in history, to about $4,330,000,000 in 1921—but little more than one-third of the amount in 1917. Is it any wonder that individual surtax payers declined? Naturally corporate taxes, too, declined. Since 1921 corporation profits have been generally increasing each year, as business came out from under the effects of the panic of 1921–22, with the result that Congress has simply been paring down the tax rates as corporate profits came back toward normal, so that they continue to pay into the Treasury about the same volume as in some of the prior periods, and hence almost the same burden.

Perhaps never before has so much effort been put forth to impress the country with Federal economy. The average citizen has no doubt that since 1922 Federal expenditures have, through rigid economy, been reduced to the extent of billions of dollars, and yet the official figures of annual expenditures payable out of ordinary receipts, but excluding postal expenditures, for the fiscal years 1922 to the fiscal year 1928, inclusive, speak for themselves and best tell the true story.

United States expenditures

Fiscal year:
1922	$3,775,000,000
1923	3,677,000,000
1924	3,506,000,000
1925	3,529,000,000
1926	3,584,000,000
1927	3,493,000,000
1928	3,626,000,000

Here is offered the striking revelation that the level of Federal expenditures for the fiscal year 1922 was $3,795,000,000, while the level for 1928, the end of a seven-year period, is $3,626,000,000, or a net reduction of $169,000,000. There has been so much propaganda about "Coolidge economy" that attention might be called to the fact that he came to the presidency in August, 1923, and that the Government expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, was $3,506,000,000, whereas the same estimated expenditures for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, is $3,626,000,000, or a net increase during this five-year period of $120,000,000. Further comment is unnecessary.

Almost as much propaganda about reduction of the public debt and the credit due Republican administrations has been indulged in. Again, the official figures should speak for themselves. President Coolidge, in his recent message transmitting the Budget, said:

> From the peak of more than $26,500,000,000 the debt had been reduced on June 30, 1927, by $8,084,794,716.

General Lord and most Republican speakers when on the stump invariably present this picture of debt reduction from its peak in 1919. They also compute interest deductions from the peak of the debt. They also agree that it was necessary to contract this peak volume of debt in 1919. When, however, they attempt to minimize credit due the recent Democratic administration for debt reduction, they about face at the Treasury and pretend that the true peak of the debt was around $25,500,000,000, upon the theory that a large balance was in the Treasury at the time. They might just as logically have gone further and alleged that a large quantity of other assets readily convertible into cash were in existence at the time, and that therefore the true amount of the debt on March 4, 1921, was correspondingly less than the actual or official figures. This is the first instance in which the Treasury has attempted in its annual report to confuse the true status of the debt for partisan purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. We have recently heard much talk about the amount derived by the Treasury from nonrecurring receipts. I have gone into that subject with some care and am confident that in the $3,750,000,000 calculation I have not mistaken the accurate figures more than $100,000,000 in either direction. The following are the net amounts that have actually gone into the Treasury and constitute a part either of our regular expenditures or payment on public debt, which is the same thing.

Practically, cash assets inherited by Harding-Coolidge administrations and amount of net receipts to Treasury, fiscal years 1922 to 1927, inclusive:

War Finance Corporation	$157,247,000
Receipt from sale of Federal farm-loan bonds	199,928,000
Railroads	442,652,000
Grain Corporation	7,000,000
Total	806,827,000
Add:
Foreign debt interest and repayments	841,000,000
Back taxes collected after 1920 for 1917–20 net	1,300,000,000
German payments for army occupation	25,000,000
Sale of surplus war supplies, including transfers and withdrawals	492,949,000
Reduction of balance in general fund on June 30, 1921	321,000,000
Total	3,776,776,000
Public debt reduction prior to Mar. 3, 1921	2,545,000,000
Grand total	6,321,776,000
Debt of the Federal Government when at its peak Aug. 31, 1919, was	26,596,000,000
Feb. 28, 1921, it was	24,051,000,000
Reduction	2,545,000,000
Total gross debt Feb. 28, 1921	24,051,000,000
June 30, 1927, it was	18,512,000,000
Reduction	5,539,000,000
Grand total reduction from Aug. 31, 1919, to July 1, 1927	8,084,000,000
The amount of reduction prior to Mar. 4, 1921, $2,545,000,000, plus Treasury receipts from cash assets left by Wilson administration, $3,786,000,000	6,332,000,000
Total reduction for which Harding-Coolidge administrations supplied the money	1,752,000,000

Mr. Chairman, these are net receipts from practically cash assets bequeathed by the Wilson administration to the Harding-Coolidge administration.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Pardon me; you mean not due to economy?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Not due to economy or taxes since March 4, 1921. I wanted to have these exaggerated points made just as clear and complete as possible, and I think I have made them so. In addition to this huge volume of net receipts, the Treasury still has on hand the following amounts of securities that were turned over by the Wilson administration March 4, 1921. Before reading them I should say that the Treasury has the presumption to reduce the German debt for Army occupation to its present worth of $156,000,000, although the Harding administration, by the grossest negligence, failed until it was almost too late to take any step to collect this German debt of nearly $255,000,000, with the result that in order to get it recognized at all in the Paris agreement distributing reparations our Government was obliged to remit all interest.

Railroads	$230,454,000
Germany, for Army occupation	224,000,000
War obligations of foreign governments, less Russia and Liberia	9,778,780,000
Securities for foreign governments for war supplies, but omitting those of Russia, Latvia, Estonia, Rumania, Nicaragua, the Croats, Serbs, and Slovenes, $53,143,000; also relief securities, $23,308,000	457,695,000
Securities from sales of war surplus property	12,140,000
Total	10,704,099,000
Deduct from gross debt of June 30, 1927	18,512,000,000
The amount of above securities	10,704,000,000
Leaves net balance of debt	7,808,000,000

There has been much Republican propaganda about the extent to which they have reduced the average interest rate on the war debt. This accomplishment is so infinitesimal that it only serves to remind the country of the wisest and most wonderful war financing by the Wilson administration to be found in the history of any country in any war. The Wilson administration in 1917 stabilized the total long-term war debt of near $17,000,000,000 on a maximum basis of 4¼ per cent interest rate. Our Civil War rates were from 5 to 7 per cent. In accomplishing this tremendous feat over the protest of almost all the great financial institutions to the effect that the rate must be as high as 4½ per cent at least, the American taxpayers were literally saved billions of dollars compared with the saving of millions by the slight interest reductions which Republican administrations have been able to effect eight years after the war. What really happened was that the peak of the amount paid for interest was not reached until the fiscal year 1923, when the Harding administration paid $1,056,000,000 interest as compared with $1,020,000,000 for 1920. The Harding and Coolidge administrations have permitted the banks to fix prices of Government securities. The result was that the peak of interest rates, which was 4.29 per cent on the average, was not passed until after the fiscal year 1922. Under this loose policy of financing we see even long-term bond issues of $762,000,000, at 4¼ per cent, callable in 1947, standing to-day in the markets at the price of 115¼. Another refunding operation comprised a bond issue of 4 per cent, callable in 1944, amounting to $1,042,000,000, which bears a price to-day of 110¼. Naturally, everyone during periods at all normal would have Government securities at par or a slight premium, but the sort of financing just illustrated will cost the American taxpayers a vast amount of the alleged interest saving. In order that everyone can see, I read the average interest rates on the public debt beginning with the fiscal year 1919 and ending with the fiscal year 1927, as follows:

	Per cent		Per cent
1919	4.10	1924	4.21
1920	4.19	1925	4.14
1921	4.29	1926	4.09
1922	4.29	1927	3.96
1923	4.22

The anomalous condition that first attracts attention is that with America rolling in wealth and having mountains of idle gold and credit, the Republican administrations have not been able to bring the average interest rate on the public debt, comprising the most gilt-edged securities in existence, down to as much as 4 per cent until 1927, or more than eight years after the war. What a wonderful tribute to the wise financing of the Wilson administration!

The Harding and Coolidge administrations not only fell heir to the huge assets already described but to such great financial and economic agencies as the Federal reserve system, which has stabilized money, credit, and business, and constitutes the outstanding factor in such business improvement as has occurred since 1921–22; the War Finance Corporation, which, as a general utility agency, has served many invaluable financial ends; the farm-loan system, which has been a godsend to agriculture and has reduced the average interest rate to farmers near $200,000,000 per annum; a thoroughly modernized sinking fund law that will wipe out more than $10,000,000,000 of debt within 25 years from 1921; a personnel in the Treasury highly expert in Government financing, and all the technicalities relating to refunding operations and the scientific handling of the technical questions relating to the debt; a great merchant marine.

In the face of these astonishing bequests received by the Harding and Coolidge administrations, and in the face of the official figures relating to reductions of taxes, expenditures, and debt under the respective party administrations, it surpasses the human imagination to see Republican spokesmen endeavor to exalt the accomplishments of Secretary Mellon to the level of those of Alexander Hamilton. Secretary Mellon is recognized by all as one of the great heads of finance and industry in this country. The honest truth, as a matter of ordinary decency, should be acknowledged, however, that the tasks and problems of Secretary Mellon since 1921 have been not only easy but simple in the light of the conditions and facilities with which he was gratuitously presented. I challenge any unbiased person to point to a single problem the solution of which entitled Secretary Mellon to any unusual credit. He should frankly be conceded the fullest measure of credit for any and every accomplishment. It is not necessary for the purposes of my statement that his record should be minimized in the least. But let the official facts and figures speak for themselves.

The public debt, in the light of our national wealth, is not relatively so great as the debt following the Civil War. Nor have we paid on it more rapidly thus far than they paid on the Civil War debt during the years that followed. I am rather strong on debt payment in accordance with the well-established traditions and policies of the American Government in the past. I believe not only in utilizing the sinking fund but, as stated, any important nonrecurring receipts and surpluses arising under normal peace tax rates during years more prosperous than ordinary should be applied to debt payments. I am, in conclusion, prepared to vote for certain amendments to the pending bill, and whether or not they are adopted I shall support the bill on its final passage. I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think that the present law, and particularly the bill, takes care of the reductions that are proper and desirable as against men who derive their incomes from business or industry or commerce, but I submit very respectfully that it does not take care of that large class of men who derive their income from their own labor or personal efforts. It does not take care of lawyers and doctors and architects and engineers and preachers and teachers. These men and, of course, many others who may be named, whose labor, whose personal initiative, and whose brain power are the source of their revenues, are not protected against emergency expenses.

Now, what do we find? Under the law and under the bill, if a man's factory is burned, either totally or partially, there is a deduction. If a man in business contracts bad debts, against which he could insure if he were prudent, yet those bad debts are allowed as a deduction. There is a deduction also for depreciation in the machinery and in the plant generally from which he derives his revenue. There is also a deduction for depletion of mines, oil, gas, other natural deposits, timber, and so on; and we have two additional factors of protection allowed in this bill that have never been in any bill before. One of these is a deduction, on page 24, for future expenses in case of a casual sale of real property, a mere guess as to whether or not a man who sells real estate will have to take it back on foreclosure or something like that; a mere guess.

And again there is a deduction allowed to members of a cooperative apartment house for expenses incident to that apartment, as for taxes, insurance, repairs, and so on. These are deductions as against material things of men who own property. Now, I believe this is the second time or the third time when a revenue bill has been under consideration that I have referred to this matter, and I want to appeal to the men on both sides to take care of those casual, unexpected, and unavoidable emergency expenses which the individual professional man may suffer, against which no amount of forethought on his part can provide, such as sickness and the like.

When a man whose income comes from his own labor is sick not only does the source of revenue stop but there is an expense on top of that—surgical, medical, and hospital. If he dies, or if a member of his family dies, there is a fixed and unavoidable expense. I submit, gentlemen, the reasons which have been submitted heretofore why this should not be allowed are not well founded. There has never been an argument made against the justice and the fairness of it. A man whose income is derived from his factory is allowed a deduction if the factory is partially destroyed or if it is worn out by depreciation. But if his human machine is destroyed by disease, in whole or in part, if through the constant struggle and effort to put over his professional career, he needs the repairs by medicine and surgery and by the hospital for nerve and brain rest, he is not allowed one copper cent as deduction. The excuse that has been made all the time was this: It is unworkable and impracticable. Now, gentlemen, that is the only point I am going to talk about. They say it is impracticable. As I asked my good friend from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], Can there be any fraud worked upon the Government as to whether or not a man was operated on? Is there not a scar on his body to show it? Can there be any doubt as to whether or not some member of his family has been buried? Is there not a fresh grave to mark the fact? Can there be any doubt as to whether or not a man was lain up in a hospital away from his office? There must be a host of witnesses to show that he was not at his office and that he was in the hospital. The only other answer—and that was skillfully given by the gentleman [Mr. CHINDBLOM]—was this: It is impossible to arrive at the measure of expense. Some doctors are expensive and some are not; some hospitals are expensive and some are not.

I will answer just like they answer on this matter of the depletion of minerals. What do they say as to who shall decide how much oil has been drawn out; how much coal has been removed; what depreciation has been made on the machinery; or what loss has been suffered by a partial fire? Who decides that? Not the taxpayer nor any absolute standard of arithmetic, geometry, logic, or anything else; nothing save the discretion of the commissioner.

In the amendment I shall propose at the proper time there will be conferred upon the commissioner the power to say that these deductions shall be made upon the basis of the ordinary and current value of such expenses, and he shall have the power to decide whether or not the charges for a burial, the charges for an operation, the charges for medical services, and the charges for hospitalization are reasonable and fair. Is not that a hundred times simpler? Is not that one hundred times more certain of ascertainment, and therefore not one-hundredth part of the chance of fraud being committed upon the Government as there is in reference to this matter of the future expense in cases of the casual sales of real property, as found on page 24 of the bill? I would like to know whose guess, whose surmise, and whose estimate shall determine what shall be the deduction as to future expenses arising from the casual sales of real estate. Who shall determine what has been the depreciation in a manufacturing plant, and who shall ascertain and determine by any certain process what has been the depletion from mines, such as oil, coal, gas, or any such mineral product as that, against which deductions for depletion are allowed? Always and only the commissioner.

I submit, gentlemen, that here is the chance and duty of this Congress to say that the human machine is a more important factor in the production of income in this country than the steel machine, and that if we can take care of the material machine, if we can take care of the machine made of iron and of steel, with its essential parts of rubber belting and leather belting and wooden mountings, then we can certainly take care of the human machine that made the material machine. And we ought to do it, so that the taxpayer, finding that he is being worn, that the stress of professional obligations and duties are bearing down on him, will not be compelled to say, "Well, I dare not stop; I must go on to the breaking point, because if I stop running my expenses continue; if I go to a hospital to rest, my expense there will be equal to the losses sustained by a failure to carry on business in the office, and I will be taxed upon my hospital expenses." There is no doubt about this. If a member of my family should die or should have to undergo a serious operation or have to have medical treatment, I pay a tax upon the very money that is paid out for that essential and unavoidable element of expense. There is no doubt about that. I pay a tax on it, and I submit, gentlemen, that we ought not in this act to discriminate against the human machine and the initiative, energy, and enterprise of men and women in favor of the dead machinery which men themselves do make and use to produce wealth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the discussion of this tax bill, following so closely upon the discussion of the appropriation bill, reminds me of the boy who said to his father, "Dad, what is a Congressman?" His father answered, "A Congressman, my son, is a man who is sent to Washington to reduce taxes and vote for all our favorite appropriation bills." [Laughter.]

The question of taxation has been a troublesome one ever since the beginning of time, as was suggested by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], and although they are nearly always extremely capable officials, the assessors and tax collectors never enjoy a very marked degree of popularity in any community. You will remember that way back in Bible days, when the multitude said, "Master, what shall we render unto Caesar?" That also was a problem of taxation; but in those days taxation was more in the nature of tribute. They did not receive very much material benefit for the money they paid. To-day, as has been suggested, we enjoy many valuable improvements and many wonderful benefits for the money we pay as taxes.

I am not a lawyer and I am not capable of discussing the technical sections of the bill; in fact the few of us who are not lawyers, in the midst of this turmoil, being engulfed by the tremendous technical discussions of the Members of the legal profession, are obliged occasionally to leave the room and get a little air. We find ourselves completely submerged by a flood of legal nomenclature. Possibly the work of the simplification specialists will remedy this condition.

However, we commenced this program of taxation in 1909 in a very modest sort of way with a 1 per cent tax on corporations with an income in excess of $5,000.

The rates were raised again in 1913, and we passed an income tax amendment. The present policy was really begun in 1916, and after our entry into the World War normal rates were doubled and surtaxes increased to 63 per cent. In 1919 the act was passed increasing normal and surtaxes to a total of 77 per cent. Revisions occurred in 1921, 1924, and 1926, and we are now taking the fourth step down the rate ladder after taking five steps up.

In 1924 we had the so-called Mellon plan under discussion in the House, and at that time you will remember "politics was not adjourned." Although many Members suggested that taxation was an economic question and should never be colored with political debate or influenced by political expediency, still politics did creep in, and as we had some Members on the Republican side who did not quite agree with us who united with the Members on the Democratic side of the House, the combination succeeded in preventing the adoption of the 25 per cent surtax, and we were forced to compromise at 40 per cent.

When some of the Democratic Members arrived home after the session of 1924, after the combination filibuster against the Mellon plan, they were not met with outstretched hands and a hearty welcome by many of their constituents. I think they were told in their home territory that they had made a grievous error in throwing away the opportunity they had to improve business conditions by placing the surtax at a figure that would discourage investment in nontaxable securities.

They returned after the next election in quite a different frame of mind and showed a very strong inclination to go along with us, and helped to write a bill that I think met with the universal approbation of the country.

There has been something said about the exemptions provided in 1926, and you gentlemen have all been Members here long enough to know that legislation of this character is obtained by compromise, and the increase in the amount of the exemptions made at that time of $1,500 to single folks and $3,500 to married folks was made in a spirit of compromise because the members of our committee who are on the Democratic side would not go along with us in a reduction of the surtax unless we made this reduction to the individuals, and so we yielded in the matter of the exemptions for the so-called little fellows—as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] denominated them—and then the minority agreed to our rate on surtax.

Now, before answering some of the statements made yesterday by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] I want to say Mr. GARNER sometimes attempts to be very sincere. I might entertain you with a description of many things that happened in the committee, but it is my personal opinion that the ethics of the situation absolutely preclude a Member of the House repeating on the floor statements from the record of executive sessions. This may not be the opinion of all the members of the committee, but even if it becomes merely a tradition I shall continue to respect and observe it.

It is my candid opinion that if the gentleman's party was in power, he would be just as conservative regarding the amount of tax reduction as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is. One advantage of being politically prominent in the minority membership is that you can be vociferously for a policy that you would not countenance or consider if the responsibility rested upon you. The gentleman from Texas, if he were chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, would not be for a reduction in taxes of from four to five hundred million dollars.

Those of us who remember the placement of a duty on goat hair can easily see the reference to the same animal in the newspaper statement that he had decided it was "useless to butt his head against a stone wall," and that he thought three hundred million reduction was about all he could get. The gentleman from Texas has a keen intellect and an engaging personality, but when he starts out on a political rampage he is forgetful of everything except political advantage.

Now if you will take the record, page 167, and read that statement that was made before the committee, I think you will find an absolute answer to the charge made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in his speech. I think you will have no doubt as to the situation, and you will be convinced that we did not take the low estimates because we wanted them to be low, but in many cases we took some higher than the highest estimates of Mr. Nash, Mr. Ebersole, and Mr. McCoy.

I am sure that every member of the committee was anxious to come here to Washington this fall and write a peace-time tax bill. I think there is a great deal of substance in what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] said, that it was time we did so.

I dare say there was a general disposition among Members to do away with the so-called nuisance taxes, but there was some logic in the argument that as they were put on as a war emergency they should remain through the period of the debt.

But, gentlemen, when you cut your coat you must know how much cloth you have. And we were guided by the Treasury statements as to probable surpluses in future years.

Now, in relation to the error that they say was made in 1927, I refer you to pages 5 and 6 of the record in the Treasurer's report, in which Mr. Mills says that the nonrecurring items amount in 1926 to $215,000,000 and in 1927 to $414,000,000. The loss of these assets must be taken into consideration in the discussion of this bill.

The hearings are very complete and you will find there a discussion of the broad basis of taxation that should be adopted.

One gentleman, who represented the manufacturers of automobiles, in protesting against the tax said that if you wanted a broad basis of taxation you ought to tax bathtubs, because they were used as much as automobiles and a good deal more on Saturdays and Sundays. [Laughter.] Whether that is a sound argument for a broad basis of taxation I leave to your judgment.

Now, on pages 167 and 168 you will find the figures giving the statements of Mr. Nash, Mr. Ebersole, and Mr. McCoy, and I think you will find the interrogations by members of the committee of Mr. Mills particularly interesting. I do not think there is anything so valuable and which will give so much information as this portion of the hearings on the bill and the colloquy between Mr. Mills and the committee.

I should like to have seen the so-called nuisance taxes entirely removed and the corporation tax reduced to 10 per cent, but we were not justified in making greater reductions than this bill contains.

It is possible that with continuing prosperity the reduction in corporation tax may not produce the loss in revenue that the plain arithmetic demonstrates. However, I believe we have about reached the limit of tax reduction, and it might be wise in the future to apply surplus, if there is any, to reduction of the national debt, which, as President Coolidge has said, is "also tax reduction."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the easiest things for a Member of Congress to do is to vote for the reduction of taxes, to offer amendments for reduction, and then go home and tell his constituents how much he did to reduce Federal taxes. It is as easy for the United States Chamber of Commerce to have a referendum among its members as to whether or not they wanted tax reduction. Of course, the answer came back unanimously that they were in favor of tax reduction and demanding a reduction of $400,000,000.

I am one Member of the House who is of the opinion that this is no time to reduce taxes to any great extent. I do not believe that we should reduce taxes this year more than $100,000,000, if we reduce them at all. We must look ahead for the best interest of the country. We must consider 1938 and 1958, not only 1928. We must consider the best economic interest of the whole country and not only the best political expedient for one congressional district.

We hear so much talk about the surplus in the Treasury.

The word "surplus" is handed out as a figure of speech, as if we had every year actually on hand in the Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars. Actually, the surplus is only a bookkeeping item. No man has a surplus as long as he is in debt. If you stop and consider, gentlemen, that we have an outstanding public debt of $19,654,886,579.13, you will realize that an excess of receipts over expenditures of a few hundred million dollars amounts to absolutely nothing. In talking about a surplus in connection with taxes or in considering the amount of surplus as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury, it must be remembered that the word "surplus" is used in its technical sense and must be strictly construed. Surplus in public finance is simply an excess of receipts over the ordinary disbursements. Surplus in its general term and as commonly understood conveys the idea of something which remains when use or need is satisfied; something in excess of every need, use, or requirement. In speaking of the surplus of a corporation the word has a much broader meaning, for such a surplus is all moneys in excess of expenditures, outstanding liabilities, and in excess of the total face value of its shares; when we speak of a surplus in connection with an insurance company it means the assets in excess of all the capital required to meet its entire liabilities. In public finance it has no such broad meaning, and I believe that a great deal of the confusion and misunderstanding which has resulted in a demand for excessive tax reduction this year is entirely based on a misapprehension of the true condition of the Treasury. I am sure that if the individual members who voted in favor of tax reduction on the United States Chamber of Commerce referendum had stopped to realize the enormous debt service, such as interest and sinking fund, required to take care of the present outstanding public debt, they would not have joined in the ridiculous demand for a tax reduction resulting in a loss of four hundred million annually in Treasury receipts.

Besides the belief generally, even on the floor of this House, as I pointed out during the last tax reduction bill and on other occasions, the excess of receipts over expenditures called surplus in the Treasury is not really physically available, but is supplied quarterly in redeeming outstanding obligations and as the available cash exceeds the requirements of governmental expenditures the debt is thereby reduced. The situation works out this way: The Treasury has maturities to meet on the 15th of the month in March, June, September, and December. Normally a part of these maturities have to be refunded. In determining how much refunding is necessary the Treasury considers its cash on hand, its expected receipts for the succeeding quarter, and its expected expenditures for that period, and borrows for refunding purposes only enough to carry it to the next quarterly date. The reason for this is obvious, since it is undesirable for the Treasury to borrow money at 3¼ per cent and then to leave it in the banks where it receives 2 per cent interest. An example of how surplus goes into debt reduction can be seen by the Treasury's activities on the 15th day of the month of each quarter. Let us assume that on the 15th day of December there are $400,000,000 of certificates mature. The Treasury takes into account its cash. Let us assume that it is $50,000,000 on that day. It then estimates its expected receipts from taxes and other sources during the next three months in excess of expenditures, and then determines that it must sell, let us assume, $200,000,000 of new certificates. It has thereby indebted for $200,000,000, but has reduced the public debt by $400,000,000, so that automatically the public debt would be reduced by $200,000,000. The situation is, as Mr. Winston, former Undersecretary of the Treasury describes, similar to that of a man who owed considerable money to his bank on a 90-day note. As the maturity comes around he uses his extra cash to reduce his indebtedness and renews for the balance. If the situation should be reversed and it is determined that the expenditures for a quarter would exceed the receipts, then the Treasury would be compelled to sell a larger amount of securities than it paid off and the debt would correspondingly increase. The operation is entirely automatic. Now, gentlemen, how can we talk of surpluses when there is a debt big enough to absorb every cent available each quarter?

In the appropriation bills for the next fiscal year it will be necessary for Congress to provide $369,209,093 as the year's increment to the sinking fund for the redemption of the public debt, and an item of no less than $670,000,000 to pay accruing interest on the public debt. Is it not simply ridiculous to talk about and most unstatesmanlike to urge the wiping away of a surplus by reducing taxes when the debt requires an appropriation of $670,000,000 to take care of interest? I want to remind my progressive friends who were active in the 1924 tax bill—and I am not at all ashamed of my part in the fight on the 1924 tax bill, for I consider the compromise amendments adopted by the House, the surtax on incomes in the last brackets, and the inheritance features of that bill as it passed the House an ideal tax policy for this country to follow—that we must not get away from the policy of taxation, and that there is grave danger of so doing if we support by voting for excess reduction of present taxes. I want to say to my colleagues and friends who represent the farmers and to my friends of the South that they can not consistently, conscientiously, and honestly, if you please, stand on the floor of this House and vote for further reduction of taxes to the tune of three or four hundred million dollars, and then next week come in and demand appropriations for farm relief, appropriations to take care of necessary flood relief. It just can not be done. I repeat, as I said before, any reduction at this time is dangerous, and we should not exceed $100,000,000, which is $132,735,000 less than the bill before us provides.

I want to point out to my friends who are stanch supporters of the income-tax system and a permanent policy of inheritance tax that if we ever permit taxes to run so low as to create a deficit in the Treasury, then it will play right into the hands of those who seek to do away with the income-tax system and who will say, "See, it has broken down; it will not work, and we will abolish it entirely," and substitute for it, of course, the sales tax, thereby relieving the big fellow and putting more burden on the wage earner.

Mr. Chairman, it does not take much of a depression in business, we do not have to get into any great industrial or financial crisis in order to see a material decrease in the receipt of taxes. A simple standstill of business for a while will make such a difference in the receipts of taxes as to bring us very near the red ink line of Uncle Sam's ledger. At the present time there is not a great margin to play with, as has been suggested on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Another feature of this bill the elimination of which it seems has become popular is the automobile tax. The automobile tax is simply a part of our tax system for the purpose of raising revenue. It has no other purpose. Unlike other provisions of our tax laws, as for instance taxes on narcotics, which gives the Federal Government supervision and control of the traffic, the inheritance tax, if you please, and the surtaxes on enormous incomes as was originally intended, which tends to prevent the concentration and centralization of wealth in the hands of a few families, or of a high tariff on a given article to prevent its importation, the automobile tax had no other purpose than that of raising money and it has accomplished that purpose most satisfactorily. It is easily collected, there is absolute control and can not be evaded, and it is pretty well distributed. I have not heard of one single solitary complaint on the part of an automobile purchaser. As the gentleman from Massachusetts pointed out, the old rate on a cheap car amounted to about $12, and that on the most expensive car sold in this country to about $180. I repeat, I have not heard any complaints from any purchasers of automobiles. From certain quarters a determined movement has been inspired and it has become popular to demand the removal of the automobile tax and to classify it as one of the war-time nuisance taxes. It is not a nuisance tax in any sense of the word. The paying of the tax at the time of the purchase of the automobile can not be compared with other so-called nuisance taxes, most of which have already been abolished.

I can readily understand and I have no fault to find with my colleagues coming from the automobile-producing sections of the country in seeking to abolish entirely the automobile tax, but for the world I can not see how this tax in any way affects the manufacturer. It is not paid by the manufacturers. It is paid by the purchasers. It can not be said that a tax of 3 per cent has in any way curtailed the sale of automobiles. I admit I am at a loss to see why the manufacturers should insist and make so much noise about this tax when very little has been heard from the purchasers. It has been intimated and the House was given notice that an amendment will be offered to abolish the automobile tax entirely. I serve notice now that I will not only oppose such as amendment but if no other Member of the House will, I shall offer a substitute keeping the automobile tax at the present rate. The difference in the present rate and the reduced rate contained in the present bill amounts to a loss in revenue of $33,000,000.

I come from a city that pays a large percentage of the total taxes to the United States Treasury. It would be easier for me to "yes" every demand for tax reduction, to vote for every tax reduction bill and to make myself a good fellow at the expense of the country. We realize in New York City that New York City is New York City because the whole United States is back of it. A few greedy people who think only of their own present taxes can not rush me off my feet to disregard what I conscientiously believe to be the best interest of the country.

The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], was pointing out to-day the great benefits that people derive from the money which they have paid to the Government in the form of taxes. That is quite true. But most of the direct benefit, that which the citizen sees in his every day life, comes mostly from his municipal or State government. The functions of city government are daily increasing and care of health, care of children, schools, transportation, light, and heat in many instances are looked after entirely by municipal governments. By the very nature of our form of government the Federal or National Government is limited in its sphere of activities. Yet there are a great many people who believe the Federal Government is wasting money, and when they read of the annual appropriations made by Congress, now reaching the three and four billion dollar mark, the idea becomes general that such an enormous amount is spent by the Government for current needs. The country ought to know, the information should be sent out that over 65 per cent of what we spend annually is spent because of the cost of past wars and the insistence on the part of a great many for the preparation for future wars.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, more than that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; more than that, I should say it is nearer 75 per cent. Just look, out of the present Budget of $3,505,000,000, excluding the Post Office, because that practically takes care of itself, with the exception of a few million dollars of deficit, $2,265,000,000 go for past wars and for preparation for future wars. The War Department takes $390,000,000, the Navy Department $362,000,000, and I do not think that includes construction of new ships, the Veterans' Bureau $612,000,000, the Pension Bureau $231,000,000, and interest on your last war $670,000,000. I do not include the sinking fund, because that reduces your debt and interest correspondingly.

Only yesterday we saw this House stupidly stand up here and vote appropriations for $6,000,000 on two tubs that are not worth keeping afloat, when you know—and if you do not know it you should know it, and if you have not been told by the Navy Department the information is available—that we will never as an American Congress ever vote another cent for the building of a new battleship. Naval experts will never ask us to build more battleships. They know they are obsolete. They know they do not want them any more. Yet the department asked you to spend over $6,000,000 on these old tubs. And why? To tie up two ships in a drydock for two years and keep the floating hotels agoing as long as they can. It is easy to go home and say, "I have reduced your taxes," but if you want to maintain the policy of an income tax and an inheritance tax, and if you are sincere that you want farm relief and you want to appropriate funds to take care of conditions brought about by floods, then do not vote one increase in the amount of reductions in this bill but vote to reduce those reductions and continue to reduce the national debt at the rate we are now going. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, in 1924, when the tax bill was under consideration, I proposed an amendment to strike out section 1101, which delegated to the Internal Revenue Department a blanket grant of power to make rules and regulations that have the binding force of law. This was promptly voted down. I offered the same amendment to the tax bill of 1926, and this was also voted down. My contention being that Congress alone has the power to make law, and that the regulations of the Internal Revenue Department are in fact law. Yielding for a question, the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee asked if I did not know the courts had held that Congress had this right, and a friend of mine facetiously remarked that my argument was all right, "but, unfortunately, the Supreme Court does not agree with you." It is to this phase of the subject, its effect and results, therefore, to which I now propose to address the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not mean any reflection or offense in any way.

Mr. DEAL. I do not think the gentleman intended any offense and I did not so intend to imply. But what I want to say is, I do not agree with either gentleman.

After having analyzed every decision of the Supreme Court bearing upon this subject, I do not concede to my friend that the Supreme Court disagrees entirely with my view. On the contrary, the courts have in every decision I have found iterated and reiterated the axiom that Congress can not delegate its power to make law. The question which we have to consider, therefore, is not the right of Congress to delegate the law-making power, but as to whether by using another name or exercising a play upon words, it in effect does delegate the right to make law. In Craig v. Missouri (U. S. 29, 408) Chief Justice Marshall handing down the decision for the court said in part:

> The Constitution is not to be evaded by giving a new name to an old thing.

In the matter under consideration Congress has drifted into the habit of using the phrase that an executive branch shall have the right to make "rules and regulations," which rules and regulations have the binding force of law, and undoubtedly come within the inhibition, the—

> Constitution is not to be evaded by giving a new name to an old thing.

This decision has not been reversed. There may be a distinction as to a rule or regulation for carrying into effect a law enacted by Congress, but a rule or regulation that is in effect and to all intents and purposes law, is inhibited, and a change of name does not alter the fact.

None will deny that it is a duty of the administration, as a constitutional mandate, to execute the law as enacted by Congress; this involves the necessity for it first to interpret the law and then make such administrative regulations as it may deem necessary to guide its subordinates in carrying out the mandates of the law. It has this right without any statutory law delegating such powers; there is no objection to this; then why write it into a statute? That very act in itself is a delegation of legislative powers, otherwise why should the administration seek to have such a paragraph incorporated in all of the revenue bills? The Internal Revenue Department has, by its interpretations and regulations, changed our statutory laws, resulting in the grossest injustice to taxpayers and to the plan and system devised for the conduct of the Nation's business. Congress knows that the internal revenue has done these things. If we do not know it, we ought to know it, and when we delegate this blanket grant of power, knowing that the Internal Revenue Department has violated, extended, and contracted the provisions of statutes enacted by Congress, it is equivalent to consenting that the Internal Revenue Department may do these things and is therefore a delegation of the legislative power not warranted either by the Constitution or any decision of the courts that I have been able to find.

In United States, Dallas 2, 409, the Attorney General moved for a mandamus to be directed to the Circuit Court for the District of Pennsylvania commanding the said court to proceed under a certain petition of William Hayburn, who had applied to be put on the pension list of the United States as an invalid pensioner. The case arose out of an act of Congress passed March 23, 1792. The Attorney General stated to the court that the motion was made ex officio without an application from any person, but to secure the execution of an act of Congress. The court was divided and the motion was not allowed. The Attorney General then changed the ground for his motion, declaring it to be at the instance and in behalf of William Hayburn, a party in interest. Still the court held the motion under advisement and no decision was ever rendered, as the reasons assigned by the judges for declining to execute this act of Congress involved a great constitutional question.

The Circuit Court of Pennsylvania had refused the motion on the ground that—> neither the legislative nor executive branches can constitutionally assign to the judiciary any duties but such as are properly judicial; that the duties assigned to the circuit court by this act were not of that description.

This court, consisting of Justices Wilson and Blair, of the Supreme Court, and Peters, district judge, declared in a letter to the President, that it—> could not act because Congress was delegating to it powers not judicial.

The Circuit Court of New York and that of North Carolina took the same position, claiming, in substance, that Congress could not delegate to them such powers. At this early date in the history of our Federal Government no judge or court had the temerity to say that Congress could delegate to the Executive or judiciary the right to makes rules or regulations that had the binding force of law.

In Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649), October term, 1891, just 100 years after the Hayburn case was sidetracked.

This was a test case as to the constitutionality of the so-called "reciprocity law," in which the President was authorized to suspend the tax on the importation of certain commodities, upon the condition that the importing country would suspend duties on corresponding exports from our country.

The Supreme Court held:

> The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and in conferring authority and discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done. To the latter no valid objection can be raised.

The proper distinction, the court said, was this: The legislature can not delegate its powers to make law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things on which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend.

The case does not parallel that of the question of rules and regulations of the Internal Revenue Department, no penalties being involved. Mr. Justice Lamar and Chief Justice Fuller, however, dissented in so far that the third section is valid and constitutional legislation, saying:

> We think that this particular provision is repugnant to the first section of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States," and that no part of this legislative power can be delegated by Congress to any other part of the Government, executive or judiciary, is an axiom in constitutional law and is universally recognized as the principle essential to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. The legislative power must remain in the organ where it is lodged by that instrument. We think that the section in question does delegate legislative power to the executive department. (In Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States, 216 U. S. 177; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 194; St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railway Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co., 224 U. S. 194 et al.)

The court restates the principle advanced in Field against Clark in practically the same language. I should say that there is a material difference, however, in these cases and that of the rules and regulations promulgated by the Internal Revenue Department bearing upon the taxing power. In these cases the individuals clearly encroached upon the rights of others wherein the general public suffered or would suffer in consequence an encroachment upon their property rights. For instance, if a bridge spanning a river impeded navigation, every individual or company engaged in the transportation business would have his rights on navigable rivers impaired. In a sense it would be a confiscation of his rights, and, therefore, the minority enjoying a privilege should in the very nature of things give way to the majority.

The rules and regulations of the Internal Revenue Department, however, affect a great mass of people who in no sense encroach upon the rights of others, but realize a confiscation of their rights, guaranteed by the Constitution, incident to the invasion of the legislative powers by the Internal Revenue Department as a result of the delegation of power by the Congress of the United States to make rules and regulations that have the binding force of law.

In United States v. Grimaud (216 U. S. 614, 220 U. S. 506) we find a penalty involved, and the courts seem to have had some difficulty in enunciating a reason for its decision.

This was a writ of error to the District Court of Southern California under the criminal appeals act of March 2, 1907, as defendant in error was indicated for grazing sheep upon the Sierra Forest Reserves without a permit. In violation of regulation 45 established by the Secretary of Agriculture concerning stock grazing upon forest reserves, under the act of June 4, 1897. The district court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the act of 1897 delegated legislative power to an executive officer, and that the act is unconstitutional because it empowers an executive officer to create a criminal offense. There was no appearance for the defendant in error. The judgment was affirmed by a divided court. A petition for rehearing was granted and the cases restored to the docket. The court said, among other things:

> Congress can not delegate legislative power, but the authority to make administrative rules is not a delegation of legislative power, and such rules do not become legislation because violations thereof are punished as public offenses.
> While it is difficult to define the line which separates legislative power to make laws, and administrative authority to make regulations, Congress may delegate power to fill up details where it has indicated its will in the statute, and it may make violations of such regulations punishable as indicated in the statute.

And so held that regulations made by the Secretary of Agriculture as to grazing sheep on forest reserves have the force of law and that violations thereof are punishable under the act of June 4, 1897.

> The Secretary of Agriculture could not make rules and regulations for any and every purpose. (Williamson v. United States, 207 U. S. 425.) As to those here involved, they all relate to matters clearly indicated and authorized by Congress. The subjects as to which the Secretary can regulate are defined. The lands are set apart as a forest reserve. He is required to make provision to protect them from depredation and from harmful uses. He is authorized "to regulate the occupancy and use to preserve the forests from destruction." A violation of reasonable rules regulating the use and occupancy of the property is made a crime, not by the Secretary but by Congress. The statute, not the Secretary, fixes the penalty.
> The indictment charges, and the demurrer admits that rule 45 was promulgated for the purpose of regulating the occupancy and use of the public forest reservation and preserving the forest. The Secretary did not exercise the legislative power of declaring the penalty or fixing the punishment for grazing sheep without a permit, but the punishment is imposed by the act itself. The offense is not against the Secretary, but, as the indictment properly concludes, "contrary to the laws of the United States and the peace and dignity thereof." The demurrers should have been overruled. The affirmances by a divided court heretofore entered are set aside and the judgments in both cases reversed by a divided court.

It will be observed in this decision that the Secretary of Agriculture was limited in the matter of regulation to a specific purpose which involved a specific protection to Government property. It was not broad in its scope, nor did it affect any save those who willfully trespassed upon the property of the United States. It is not parallel in any sense with the unlimited blanket grant of power to the Internal Revenue Department, affecting all kinds of relations of the individual taxpayer with the Government. Nevertheless the language of the court is changed to some extent, and it is not clear really as to what it does mean.

The taxing power is the most vital question upon which a government functions. In analyzing these decisions of the majority and minority members of the court we find the majority laboring in a confused effort to warrant the very thing that it specifically says can not be done, while the opinion of the minority admits of no uncertainty. The majority has led us and itself into the twilight zone, the no man's land, as between a regulation and a law; it admits the difficulty of determining the line of demarcation as between a law and an administrative regulation. It has invited Congress away from the moorings of our fathers; it has led us upon strange waters and then left us in a fog without a chart or a compass with the admonition, "You can not delegate legislative power, but the authority to make administrative rules is not a delegation of legislative power. It is difficult to find the line which separates legislative power to make laws, and administrative authority to make regulations. Congress may delegate power to fill up details, where it has indicated its will in the statute, and it may make violations of such regulations punishable as indicated in the Statute."

Shades of our fathers, what does the court mean? Thank God there were four judges who did not subscribe to this conglomeration of words. I think that monuments in brass should be erected to their momery. Since I can not erect monuments, I will write into the RECORD the names of Justices Fuller, Lamar, Peckham, and Brewer, that the people may reverence the memory of these patriots who so faithfully wore the robes of Marshall and Story. James Madison prophesied during the debates in the Constitutional Convention, and 20 years later while Secretary of State, that if our "Government should ever fall within itself, it would be because of the assumption of authority by the legislative branch." He did not have the vision to see that partisan government would bring together and coordinate the three branches of the Government to this end. For 100 years our Government functioned without executive rules and regulations; the Nation grew in power, in strength, and in wealth. Congress made the laws and the executive enforced them. The rights of the people were secure. This brings us to the question of what is a law, a legislative power that Congress may not delegate. How may we determine this thing that "is not to be evaded by giving a new name to an old thing"? The courts have not marked the dividing line so we can find the administration invading the functions of Congress. By reference to Webster we find the definition of law to be—

A rule of conduct or action which is prescribed, or is formally recognized as binding by the supreme governing authority and is enforced by a sanction. In this sense the term includes any edict, decree, rescript, order, ordinance, statute, resolution, rule, judicial decision, usage, etc., which is made or recognized and enforced by the controlling authority.

The Encyclopedia Britannica defines law as—

From an old Teutonic root, lag, lie, what lies fixed or evenly. A word used in English in two main senses: (1) As a rule prescribed by authority for human action; (2) as a uniform order of sequence.

Black's Law Dictionary defines law as—

(1) That which is laid down, ordained, or established as a rule or method, according to which phenomena or actions coexist or follow each other; (2) a system of principles and rules of human conduct, etc. Law is also divided into substantive and adjective. Substantive law is that which creates rights and obligations. Adjective law provides a method of enforcing and protecting them—in other words, the law of procedure.

It would seem, therefore, that any rule, regulation, decision, edict, decree, rescript, order, ordinance, or resolution is a law, and the court has invariably declared that Congress can not delegate the power to make law. Clearly this brings the rules and regulations and decisions, another "new name for an old thing," of the Internal Revenue Department within the sphere of lawmaking. It can not be successfully disputed. Since Congress has repeatedly reenacted this delegation of power after many of the department regulations have been made, with which it is supposed to be familiar, it clearly does vacate, in part, its legislative powers, knowingly, willfully, and intentionally. The bill under consideration provides in section 62 that—

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe and publish all the rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a long concession that has been made by somebody with respect to these rules and regulations. I am not so egotistical as to feel that any act of mine, or even that of the gentleman from South Carolina, has influenced this change in the bill, but I do think that it resulted from an investigation by the Senate committee known as the Couzens committee in developing some things that have been done by the Internal Revenue Department under the grant of power delegated by this section to make rules and regulations.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAL. I will yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Section 1101 reads exactly in the bill as the gentleman has read.

Mr. DEAL. Does it say "published"?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It says promulgate and publish.

Mr. DEAL. Promulgate the rules?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It says—shall prescribe and publish all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title.

There has been no change.

Mr. DEAL. It appears that the gentleman from Illinois is correct, but this still further emphasizes the fact that the Internal Revenue Department has little respect for the mandates of Congress.

I have here the published decisions and regulations of the Internal Revenue Department. I shall not attempt to quote them; there are too many, 1,263 pages. They were evolved by: (1) The solicitor; (2) tax advisory board; (3) committee on appeals and review; (4) rules and regulations section of the Internal Revenue Department. There are 3,163 of them. Is this all? Oh, no. There are 17,143 more of these laws that have not been published, according to the report of the Couzens's investigating committee—17,143 laws known only on the inside. No man on the outside knows what they are, no one has seen them, no one has access to them. No lawyer can advise his client, no accountant can make out a tax return that can not be upset, and yet for the violation of any one of the 17,143 unpublished laws any American citizen may be imprisoned. Twenty thousand three hundred and eleven laws enacted by four separate units in the Internal Revenue Department, without concert of action, coordination of effort, or responsibility, these appointees of the Executive, who can not be reached by the votes of the people, are secretly making laws at will, laws not to be published, laws that can be changed in an hour. Under this condition or plan or system, this department has assumed to increase taxes, exempt from taxes, write law, unwrite law, apply the laws of Congress, or ignore the laws of Congress according to the whims, fancies, enmities, or favoritisms of somebody in the Internal Revenue Department, unknown to and unreachable by the voters of the United States. Do not understand me, Mr. Chairman, to reflect, or intend to reflect, upon the Secretary of the Treasury, or the efficient honest employees in this service. I am not. It is the system that I criticize, a system that invites corruption, injustice, oppression, destruction. A vicious system unworthy of any civilized nation. It is the duty of Congress to wipe out the system, and this may be done in part by withholding the blanket grant of power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make rules and regulations. In debating my amendment to strike out section 1101 in the revenue bill of 1926 I ventured the suggestion that the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee would no doubt contend that the Internal Revenue Department would be unable to collect taxes without this unlimited grant of power. Oh, no—said the gentleman in reply—the department could collect the taxes all right, but the taxpayer would not know where he was at.

In the name of high heaven how can the "taxpayer know where he is at" with 17,143 unpublished laws of which he knows nothing and can not know anything.

Speaking for my constituents, and, I think, for the American people, I ask that we be delivered from the system of "knowing where we are at." Three years ago, when I first offered to amend by striking out this blanket grant of power to the Internal Revenue Department, I had five minutes under the rules of this House in which to present my objections. I asked unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes, to which my distinguished colleague from Iowa objected. Under protest, however, he withdrew the objection, but moved that all debate end in five minutes. Ten minutes in which to debate a grant of power that has led to a promulgation of 20,311 unlawful laws affecting the collection of billions of dollars in taxes and the refund of hundreds of millions more. When the lengthy debate of 10 minutes upon the most vital question affecting American citizens ended, my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], whom I esteem, because he, like myself, is simple enough to think the Constitution ought to be obeyed, offered to amend by requiring the Internal Revenue Department to publish its rulings and submit them to Congress. This amendment seemed so innocent, so harmless, so inoffensive that it passed without debate. Little did he think, little did I think, little did any seem to think of what vast import it was. Mr. Chairman, it would have sent to the junk heap 17,143 secret laws that ought to be junked. But the Internal Revenue Department saw to it that the Senate amended this amendment out of the bill, and when it went to conference, having no friends, it died. On March 25, 1927, the press announced that—

Another income-tax reduction is a possibility. Revised estimates at the Treasury place the total collections for the year June 30, 1928, at approximately $4,800,000,000. The first quarterly income-tax receipts this year exceeded by more than $40,000,000 those obtaining last March.

Implying, I suppose, that the reduced income-tax rate is responsible for the gain; but why not? Under its system the department can make the tax any amount it pleases, irrespective of the rate fixed by Congress. The Couzens committee report shows wherein hundreds of millions of dollars have been lost to the Government by these rulings. Conversely, it could increase the revenue at will. My colleague from Texas insists upon graduated income taxes as a means of preventing swollen fortunes, and rules and regulations by which to get them. It is a dream. He defeats his own ends. There are many ways to beat him to it. The above is one. By the graduated income tax we invite the big fellow to chip into the campaign fund of the party that will protect him. We invite and pave the way to corruption in its worst form. Even so, he still passes the load on to the consumer by fixing his prices for commodities sold.

Small business can not fix prices; neither can the retired business man, no longer a menace to society, widows, or orphans. The system punishes the helpless. The big fellow can and does protect himself. It does not pay to do wrong. Do right and we will not have to apologize. Cut out the delegation of the power to the executive to make rules and regulations and we will have honesty and decency and order in our tax system. As a warrant for my strictures I quote from the—

COUZENS INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE

On March 12, 1924, this committee was appointed by the United States Senate and directed to investigate the Internal Revenue Department and report its findings, with recommendations for corrective legislation. The committee found it necessary to employ legal, engineering, accounting, and clerical assistance authorized by Senate Resolution 211. I can in the time at my disposal only refer briefly to a few of the conclusions of the committee. Every Member of Congress should read these reports.

AMORTIZATION OF WAR FACILITIES

Notwithstanding—

Says the committee—

the tremendous amounts involved, the regulations have contained no adequate statements of the principles to be observed in determining amortization allowances. No ruling or instructions for the guidance of either the engineers of the Income Tax Unit or taxpayers were published until after the expiration of the time fixed by law for the redetermination of claims. The only published ruling of the solicitor on this subject prior to October, 1925, has been completely ignored, and there has been a total lack of supervision over the work of the engineers of the Income Tax Unit engaged in passing on amortization claims.

The failure to observe any well-defined principles as to either the kind of property, the cost of which is amortizable, or in measuring the allowance has resulted in the grossest kind of dicrimination among taxpayers.

While the purpose of the amortization provision was to encourage the acquisition of facilities for the production of war necessities, a large part of the allowances are upon facilities acquired by contract entered into before April, 1917.

There has been gross discrimination in arbitrarily allowing amortization for reduced postwar cost of replacement in some cases and in denying it in others similarly situated, in allowing amortization to some transportation companies while it is generally denied others, and in allowing amortization on land.

COMPROMISE OF TAXES AND PENALTIES

It has been the consistent policy of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to exceed the authority delegated by Congress to compromise taxes. The commissioner, in compromising taxes, has followed the policy of giving the unsecured creditors and stockholders of insolvent corporations precedence over the Government's claim for taxes.

As administered by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the fraud penalty fixed by Congress is never enforced but is treated as a maximum penalty.

REFUNDS, CREDITS, AND ABATEMENTS

Tax refunds amounting to $459,090,825 were made by the Bureau of Internal Revenue from July 1, 1921, to April 30, 1925.

The refunds, credits, and abatements exceeding $250,000 aggregate $171,546,416.59. An analysis, based upon the ground of allowance, is given in this report. This analysis shows that the two principal grounds for these allowances are increased allowances for invested capital and taxing by special assessments. These two grounds account for $73,842,115.35, or 43.04 per cent, of all the refunds, credits, and abatements exceeding $250,000.

A list of refunds, credits, and abatements exceeding $1,000,000, which aggregate $85,929,697.99, is contained in this report at page 195.

DIVISION HEADS SUPREME

The practically unlimited discretionary power vested in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is actually exercised by the division heads. These division heads are governed by no adequate rules or instructions and unless a taxpayer is dissatisfied with the determination of his tax, or unless a refund exceeding $50,000 is involved, there is no review of the work done under a division head.

Under the procedure of the Bureau of Internal Revenue there is no way for any tax determination which is satisfactory to the taxpayer and which does not involve a refund of $50,000 or more to be brought to the attention of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any other superior of a division head, except by the protest or complaint of a subordinate of such division head.

All communications from subordinates of division heads to superiors of division heads are forwarded through the division heads. Communications from section chiefs to the commissioner and solicitor relating to official business have been suppressed. It is the policy of the Income Tax Unit to discourage complaints and protests by subordinates. This policy leaves the division heads supreme and their superiors in ignorance of how the law is really administered.

PUBLICITY OF PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICES

Many of the principles, practices, methods, and formulas applied in the determination of tax have never been reduced to writing, and only 15½ per cent of the formal written rulings applicable to income taxes have been published.

This failure to promulgate and publish the principles and practices to be followed in the determination of tax liability has had the following results:

(1) Information for the guidance of the employees of the Income Tax Unit is so incomplete that gross discrimination results from the failure to apply uniform principles to similar cases.

(2) Taxpayers in many instances have failed to claim allowances granted others similarly situated.

(3) To secure the benefit of unpublished precedents taxpayers are forced to employ former employees of the Income Tax Unit to advise and represent them in tax cases.

(4) Their exclusive possession of information as to the unpublished precedents and practices of the Income Tax Unit has placed an artificial value upon the services of ex-employees which enables them to demand and receive immense fees for information which should be freely available to everybody.

(5) This artificial premium thus placed upon the exclusive information possessed by the employees of the Income Tax Unit and the opportunity thus afforded for highly lucrative outside employment is the cause of the extraordinary turnover among the employees of the unit and of the difficulty experienced by the unit in retaining the services of competent employees at salaries within the range of the salaries paid by the Government for comparable service.

(6) The failure to consider closed cases as precedents and to publish the principles and practices followed in closed cases as precedents has deterred the formation of a body of settled law and practice. The unsettled state of the law and practice has encouraged the filing of claims for allowances and require the constant rediscussion and reconsideration of questions which should be settled by precedents established by closed cases.
